FATE OF BONUS UP TO SENATE

SPEED LIMIT'S 20 MILES, BUT WHO KEEPS IT?

Very Few, Observers Report.

As far as the average motorist is concerned there might as well be no twenty mile an hour speed limit on the statute and ordinance books.

It took only an afternoon's drive yesterday along a few of Chicago's thoroughfare to convince two observers with an eye to the speedometer that any speed limit under thirty miles an hour is made only to be broken.

A few drivers—a very few—travel at a consistent twenty. The majority bowl along between twenty-two and twenty-five. Many travel between twenty-six and twenty-eight. A bunch of them hit thirty and pass it.

A snap judgment would place the average speed of the average motorist, when the going is from fair to good, between twenty-two and twenty-four miles an hour.

The Log Begins.

The observers left The Tribune plant at 2:30 yesterday afternoon. It was motoring weather, and Michigan boulevard, toward Lincoln park, was fairly well crowded.

The log of their journey ran as follows; the numbers being those of the cars observed:

License No. 17-723, a sedan with two men and two women, going north on Michigan avenue between Oak street and Burton place. Hit thirty miles an hour a half dozen times.

No. 17-301, kept up an even jog of twenty-five miles an hour as it started north through Lincoln Park.

No. 835-765, a small sedan driven by a young woman, which rolled along at a steady twenty miles an hour.

One Car Doesn't Speed.

A family party was taken an outing in

No. 527-860, another sedan. There wasn't any hurry about these people. Nineteen miles an hour was about their limit. It wasn't until reaching the new stretch of pavement on Sheridan road north of Belmont, where the drive is double, that a little real speed was observed in

No. 616-911, a touring car with dilapidated fenders, driven by a Chinaman. At Roscoe street he narrowly missed striking a father and mother who sought to lead their two children across the drive. Then he went on north going at thirty-one miles an hour. The traffic slowed a little on Clarendon avenue north to Wilson. The average speed was between eighteen and twenty-five miles an hour.

27 Miles an Hour.

On Sheridan road between Wilson avenue and the Edgewater Beach hotel

No. 301-528, a Yellow cab, No. 1528, clipped along at a steady twenty miles an hour. North of the hotel a man and a girl in a roadster,

No. 192-468, clipped off twenty-seven miles an hour as far as Devon avenue. West on Devon to Clark, south on Clark to Lawrence, east to Sheridan road, there wasn't much driving over twenty miles an hour. Street cars held the traffic down. Then along came

No. 779, a big touring car. Between Wayland avenue and Hawthorne place it kept along at thirty miles an hour. Jockeying in and out of the traffic came two Yellow cabs,

No. 300-622 and No. 302-571, cab numbers 622 and 571. They passed up the touring car at thirty-two miles an hour and kept up a thirty-mile gait all the way through Lincoln park. In the park they picked up

No. 158-893, a gentleman in a sedan, who wasn't going to get lost in the drive. With

No. 301-657, another Yellow cab, No. 657, the four raced for the lead of the procession.

Comes a Collision.

It looked like a dead heat until the gentleman in the sedan gradually edged ahead and sneaked first into the curved narrow roadway at the south end of the park. Park police know this short stretch as the "road of busted lamp posts." A sudden shriek of brakes at Oak street brought the procession of scurrying cars to a halt at Oak street.

No. 100-237 had collided with

No. 600-137. There was a jam for a moment. Then the mob swept on as before. So much for the north side. The observers hiked out to Washington boulevard. At Leavitt street

No. 511-632, not to be outdone by any Sheridan road brand of travel, did thirty miles an hour on his own account. A big coupe caught the infection at Western avenue and hummed

Arrest Brings Inquiry Into Art Scandal

State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe turned expert art critic yesterday. He opened an investigation into the authenticity of paintings which have been sold at the big art gallery auction sales and occupied the attention of the Chicago art colony for months.

The investigation got under way when Assistant State's Attorney Robert McMillan issued subpœnas for several men prominent in art circles and Bernard Devine, who has figured in art criticisms and sales for many years, was arrested on charges of forgery on the complaint of H. M. Kitchel, an artist of Providence, R. I.

Artist Charges Forgery.

Mr. Kitchel charged Mr. Devine with forgery, alleging the art dealer had placed his name on various spurious paintings. He made the charges after one of his pictures had been put on exhibition at the state's attorney's office to be characterized by him as a "rank forgery."

The attention of the state's attorney's office was called to the case by George L. Schein, counsel for Kitchel.

Mr. Devine, after his arrest by state's attorney's detectives at the Embassy hotel, where he lives, made counter charges that his arrest is the result of a plot to discredit him because of a $50,000 suit he started last August against Prof. Alfred Chatain.

In this suit Devine charged the existence of a group of art swindlers which he stated in his bill have operated in Chicago, New York and other cities, taking millions for forged and fake paintings, barely worth the materials to make them. He charged Prof. Chatain, said to be a connoisseur of some reputation, with being a member of this ring.

Devine Makes Counter Charges.

"It all goes back to that suit," Devine said at the South Clark street station. "Kitchel is only a catspaw in this matter, but there are others behind it who belonged to this ring, and my activities have stopped the sale of many of their fake pictures and caused them to lose thousands.

"Now they've started something that will cost them some more."

Among those subpœnaed by the prosecutor yesterday were Charles Krempp, owner of an art store at 642 Michigan avenue; and W. E. Kiley, 2115 Greenleaf avenue.

DOCTOR BLASTS WOMEN'S EXCUSE FOR BOBBED HAIR

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS, May 17.—Bobbing and shingling the hair does not prevent its falling out, nor does it cure any scalp maladies.

Dr. Bulliard, leading French hirsute specialist, today flattened out and ridiculed the customary excuse given by women who cut their hair—that they do it to save it and prevent dandruff or falling out.

"I know a wife usually tells her husband that she must cut her hair or get bald," said Dr. Bulliard, "but it is untrue. I have made hundreds of experiments by shaving or cutting the hair short from half of the scalp on different subjects, and the cut hair did not recover."

President Has Cold, But Day of Rest Helps

Washington, D. C., May 17.—President Coolidge, after a day of almost complete rest, had gained mastery tonight over a slight bronchial cold which had compelled him to cancel the day's engagements and remain away from the executive offices.

The President was still suffering somewhat tonight from the cold, contracted two days ago, but White House officials said he probably would be back at his desk Monday. He is expected to spend tomorrow in much the same manner he did today—lounging about his room, reading, and sleeping—although in doing so he will break a record of never having missed church attendance on Sunday since he came to Washington as Vice President.

Has Had Ailment Before.

The cold was described as entirely of a bronchial nature, such as Mr. Coolidge has suffered from at times over a long period of years. It never has developed into anything alarming, always having been dissipated by a short rest. The President has a slight bronchial weakness and frequently goes to a specialist here for treatments, particularly before he makes an address.

Weather conditions in Washington the last week and unusually hard work for several days led to the President's indisposition. On Thursday Mr. Coolidge stood in the open air bareheaded for two hours greeting guests at a garden party. Late that evening he and Mrs. Coolidge, despite a pouring rain, motored to the navy yard to fulfill a promise to attend a navy ball.

The cold also was superinduced by a heavy drain on the President's vitality brought about by long hours at his office. With legislation coming in a steady stream from the capitol, he has been spending about nine hours a day in his office and several evenings on his bonus veto message and other matters.

Went to See Specialist.

Mr. Coolidge suffered from the cold all during the day yesterday, and newspaper men who conferred with him late in the day noticed a huskiness in his voice. Immediately after his conference with the correspondents he went to see the throat specialist.

It still was troubling him this morning, and after C. Bascom Slemp, his secretary, had conferred with him it was announced that all engagements had been canceled for the day. Several pressing matters, a few letters and three nominations, were taken to him today.

C. S. PETERSON, PRINTER, FAILS FOR A MILLION

Better Tire Co. Held Bankrupt.

County Commissioner Charles S. Peterson, former chairman of the finance committee of the county board and until recently reputed to be a millionaire, yesterday was adjudged a bankrupt by Federal Judge Adam C. Cliffe.

All of the parties involved in Mr. Peterson's difficulties, including associates in the printing industry as well as creditors of the Better Tires corporation, the failure of which precipitated the action, were present in Judge Cliffe's chambers when the order was issued.

Silverman Also Hit.

Two other orders were issued at the hearing. In adjudging Mr. Peterson a bankrupt, Judge Cliffe appointed C. B. Hazelwood, of the Union Trust company, receiver for the individual estate. He also adjudged bankrupt S. H. Silverman, partner of Mr. Peterson in the Better Tires corporation. Mr. Hazelwood was made receiver for Mr. Silverman's individual estate and for Mr. Peterson and M. Silveman as copartners.

Mr. Hazelwood and Joseph B. Fleming, his attorney, refused to discuss the next move to be made in the effort to conserve the assets of Mr. Peterson and Mr. Silverman.

It was reported, however, that Judge Cliffe will name Harry A. Parkin referee in bankruptcy and that there will be a formal meeting of all creditors within the next few days.

The orders were entered in the United States District court. Mr. Hazelwood furnished $10,000 bond and the receiver immediately began the task of conserving the assets.

Mr. Peterson's Stand.

Mr. Peterson, who has vigorously asserted he is personally solvent even after the Better Tires corporation got into financial straits some months ago, continued to hold that position yesterday. But he offered no opposition to Judge Cliffe's action.

After the hearing Carl R. Latham, attorney for Mr. Peterson, issued the following statement.

"Mr. Peterson is content that his assets, if properly administered, are more than sufficient to cover his liabilities. He is not in a position at present, however, to meet all of his obligations.

"He does not want his friends, who have been so willing to stand by him in every way, to be sacrificed through the actions of those creditors who have been unwilling to cooperate in an effort to preserve his valuable property."

Figures Are Withheld.

Officials at the hearing withheld estimates of the amount Mr. Peterson's liabilities are alleged to exceed his assets. In a petition in bankruptcy filed on May 3 by Silverman it was charged that Mr. Peterson's personal liabilities are in excesse of $1,000,000, and that his indebtedness outbalances his assets by more than $500,000.

It was said by several who attended the hearing that indications are that the liabilities of the Better Tires corporation are $1,100,000, with assets of $400,000.

FIND FAREWELL NOTE OF LOST FRENCH AIRSHIP

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS, May 17.—A telegram from Propriano, on the west coast of Corsica, states that a farewell message from the crew of the Dixmude, the French dirigible which mysteriously disappeared a few months ago while on a flight to Africa, was found today in a bottle which had washed ashore.

The message read:

"Gasoline exhausted and drifting helplessly in a terrific wind storm, the crew of the Dixmude bids farewell, and vive la France."

Check Blaze; Save "Yards" from Danger

Flames, fanned by a stiff northwesterly breeze, swept through several acres of cattle and sheep pens and runways in the center of the stockyards yesterday and destroyed several landmarks dating back to 1865.

Two firemen were burned, a civilian injured and a number of cattle and sheep burned and trampled to death. For a while it was feared the fire might sweep the whole of packingtown. Fire Chief Edward J. Buckley followed a 4-11 alarm with six special calls, which brought more than fifty companies on the scene.

Loss by Fire Small.

The fire was more spectacular than destructive, however, and was checked with a loss estimated at between $60,000 and $75,000.

The flames are believed to have been started by a lighted cigaret stub thrown into a pile of hay in sheep pen No. 1 at 42d and May streets. This pen and pen No. 2, which was partly destroyed, were frame structures a block long built in 1865. Soon after the first firemen reached the scene the flames were racing along on a two-block front towards the main office building of Armour & Co.

The smoke from the burning hay and dry timbers attracted throngs of fire fans from all parts of the South Side and crowds jammed the various wooden viaducts.

Watching Blaze; Falls.

From one of these William Kirk, 38, 6348 Campbell avenue, a painter, was pushed by the crowd. Both arms were broken, several ribs were fractured and he was injured internally. He was taken to the German Deaconess hospital.

Chief Buckley himself was injured when he stepped on a live wire from which the insulation had been burned. He was thrown to the ground by the shock. Otto Dahl, his chauffeur, ran to his aid and was so badly burned he had to be given medical attention.

The property destroyed was owned by the Union Stockyards and Transit company. An assistant to O. T. Henkle, manager of the company, declared the loss would not go above $100,000, including the animals destroyed.

Although only a small number of cowboys were on duty at the time they were assisted by other stockyards employés in herding about 5,000 sheep from the burning pens to places of safety.

25 TRUCKS HAUL $100,000,000 IN GOTHAM STREET

New York, May 17.—[Special.]—A hundred million dollars rolled up 6th avenue this afternoon. Stowed in little steel safes, locked in armored cars and convoyed by squads of sharpshooters with machine guns, automatic pistols and riot guns, the treasure was moved from the old quarters of the Greenwich Savings bank at 6th avenue and 16th street to the new building, 36th street and 6th avenue.

There were twenty-five motor truck loads. Each truck carried several million dollars in Liberty bonds, treasury notes and the various state, municipal and other bonds.

WRECKSMITHY MADE IMMORTAL BY LONGFELLOW

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

LONDON, May 17.—Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's village "smithy," in Saint Mary Cray, Kent, is being demolished in order to make way for a broad street through the village.

The American poet visited Poetess Eliza Cook at Kensington in Saint Mary Cray, when he came to England and, according to tradition, "The Village Blacksmith" was written there.

In spite of the outcry raised by various local people the authorities decided to destroy the ancient "smithy." The little building was 500 years old.

HOUSE DEFEATS COOLIDGE VETO BY 313-78 VOTE

Upper Chamber to Act on Monday.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., May 17.—[Special.] — Soldiers' bonus legislation moved a step nearer enactment today when the house, by an overwhelming vote, passed the bill over the veto of President Coolidge.

The vote was 313 to 78. There were more than fifty votes to spare over the necessary two-thirds.

The bill, providing twenty year endowment insurance certificates to war veterans, has now advanced to the final stage. Passage by a two-thirds vote in the senate will place the measure on the statute books, thus ending four years of agitation.

The bonus bill will be called up in the senate on Monday. Senator Curtis [Rep., Kas.], in charge of the bill, served notice that he would ask consideration then. A further postponement was suggested, but the senate was unable to agree on a later date. There is no agreement as to limitation of debate, and it is possible a vote may not be reached on Monday.

Real Test for Coolidge.

The crucial test of administration influence will come in the senate, where members are being subjected to a bombardment by opponents of the bonus in a final effort to sustain the President's veto. Bonus advocates believe that they have a safe margin in the senate, inasmuch as senators who at one time or another have gone on record for bonus legislation total seventy-five as against a constitutional two-thirds of sixty-four. Thirty-three votes are needed to sustain the President's veto, of which only twenty-five are said to be definitely in sight.

Opponents of the bonus believe they have a fighting chance and are bringing every possible pressure on senators in an attempt to obtain eight additional votes.

Madden Upholds Veto.

Two of the leading house Republicans, Representative Longworth [Ohio], the majority leader, and Representative Madden [Ill.], chairman of the appropriations committee, swung over to the President's side in a vain effort to sustain his veto. Both have heretofore supported bonus legislation and previously voted for the present bill.

Although on ordinary issues Longworth and Madden could be counted upon almost to carry the house, their influence today was negligible. The bonus sentiment was so strong it was impossible to check it.

Representative Garrett [Dem., Tenn.], the minority leader, who has consistently opposed bonus legislation, joined with the majority leader, but was powerless to control his forces.

Hope for Senate Defeat.

The total in favor of sustaining the President's veto was greater by twenty-four votes than the negative vote at the time of the passage of the bill in the house on April 23. The bill was passed before by a vote of 355 to 54. The additional twenty-four votes showed the effect of the President's message, and gave bonus opponents hope that the bill may be defeated in the senate.

Those voting to override the President's veto included 166 Democrats, 145 Republicans, and two independents. Those voting to sustain the President included 57 Republicans and 21 Democrats.

Twenty-four Republicans and two Democrats who voted for the bonus on March 18 voted to sustain the veto today. Middle western members in this group included Representative Graham [Rep., Ill.], Madden [Rep., Ill.], Moore [Rep., Ill.], Sproul [Rep., Ill.], Williams [Rep., Mich.], Scott [Rep., Mich.], and Newton [Rep., Minn.].

Brief but Fiery Debate.

The action of the house was preceded by an hour of rapid fire debate. Fourteen members about equally divided between supporters and opponents of bonus legislation occupied the floor in brief speeches. Representative Madden led off with the announcement of his change of heart.

"Coolidge is the nation's leader," Mr. Madden said. "Our people look to him for guidance. They admire his courage and his wisdom. They are willing to follow him and I know no reason why I shouldn't follow him.

"I have always favored the bonus and voted for it, but I think the present financial status of the country justifies a change of opinion on my part. I shall therefore vote to sustain the President.

Refers to Illinois' Action.

"Illinois has voted a bonus, amounting to $55,000,000 and I have paid my share of that.

"As chairman of the appropriations committee I think I would be unworthy to stand in my place and urge economies in every direction and then vote to override the President. I believe I am doing what the nation as a whole would have me do."

Mr. Madden referred to the condition of the treasury. He said the pending tax reduction bill would wipe out any prospective surplus and might result in a deficit. The deficit might run to several hundred millions, he indicated, if all demands for appropriations were approved.

"Appropriations for compensation, insurance, hospital treatment, etc., for service men since the war up to the period ending June 30, 1925, will amount to $2,750,000,000," said Mr. Madden. "So that it cannot be said by the ex-service men of the nation that we have been unmindful of their needs. I am sure the nation is proud to have been able to supply the needs."

Longworth Airs His Views.

Mr. Longworth said that he was aware he would be charged with lack of consistency in voting against the bonus after having voted for it and having had a hand in the preparation of the bill in the last session.

"But after a most careful consideration of the circumstances and conditions," Mr. Longworth said, "today I cannot bring myself to vote to override the veto of the President."

Mr. Garrett, while urging that the President's veto be sustained, did not indorse the sentiments expressed by the President in his veto message.

"I do not indorse the intemperate language used by the President of the United States in his veto message, which needlessly offended millions of ex-service men," said Mr. Garrett. "I vote this way because I believe it to be true governmental policy."

Representative Green [Rep., Ia.], chairman of the house ways and means committee, was one of those who voted to pass the bill over the President's veto and who spoke in behalf of the measure. He denied the accuracy of the President's claim as to the condition of the treasury.

"Why Can't We Afford It?"

"The ways and means committee made up a bill which was consistent with the financial situation," said Mr. Green. "We reported a bill which was an extremely moderate measure. Will you tell me this country can not afford to make this payment?"

Several of the bonus advocates severely criticized President Coolidge for what they regarded as an insult to the veterans. Representative Rankin [Dem., Miss.], in particular, dwelt on what the President said with respect to "capitalising patriotism." Representative Newton [Rep., Minn.] replied to Mr. Rankin and declared that the President had not insulted the veterans and that what the President had said was intended to emphasize the impossibility of providing a full measure of compensation on any kind of a financial basis for the services rendered.

Representative Laguardia [Rep., N. Y.], himself an ex-service man, said that he wanted to protest in the name of "My comrades" against the unwarranted attack upon ex-service men.

Not Political, But Justice.

Representative Johnson [Rep., S. D.] said that the bonus is not a political question, but a matter of justice. He is also one of the ex-service men of the house who has been active in behalf of the bonus.

"Each of our Presidents—Wilson, Harding, and Coolidge—has opposed the granting of adjusted compensation," said Mr. Johnson. "Each secretary of the treasury has opposed it under both the Democratic and Republican administrations. It is not a question of politics but of justice.

"I am firmly convinced the passage of this act will do much to prevent the giving of pensions at any time to able bodied veterans."

Representative Fish [Rep., N. Y.], another ex-service man, said that the obligation has been recognized by practically all the nations except the United States.

"I submit," Mr. Fish said, "that the cost of the bonus will in no way affect the economic situation or injure the price of Liberty bonds."

Poland Plans to Pay Some on $157,000,000 Debt to U.S.

WARSAW, May 17.—[By the Associated Press.]—Premier Grabski declared today that Poland intended to profit by the present finandial improvement by attempting to make a payment on the debt to the United States, mostly incurred for food relief during the first years of Poland's independent existence, and now amounting to $167,000,000 plus accrued interest.

DOHENY MONEY BACKED MEXICO REVOLT, CHARGE

Quiz Justice Agents on Burns' Activities.

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.

Washington, D. C., May 17.—[Special.]—Efforts of the Brookhart committee to investigate the story that department of justice agents were involved in the revolution of 1921 in Lower California, and that the Mexican rebels were backed by "Doheny money," furnished through Albert B. Fall, at that time secretary of the interior, were related today in a hurriedly called session of the committee in which the charge of a new "frame up" was thrown at William J. Burns.

The committee held a conference with the attorney general today regarding methods of getting the canceled checks of George Remus, millionaire liquor dealer of Ohio, who told the committee Friday that he had paid out $1,500,000 in graft money since the Volstead law was passed. Court action probably will be necessary, as Remus is a prisoner at Atlanta, under guard here. Attorney General Stone will aid the committee.

Agent Wires Burns.

A telegram was made public in which the committee's attention was first called to the Mexican border situation. This was dated Feb. 1, 1924, addressed to Burns from an agent of the department of justice at San Francisco named Esola, which follows:

"Gershon, former agent of the department of justice at San Diego, claims that he has positive knowledge that the Mexican revolution of Southern California was financed with Doheny money and that Fall was the man who financed it. That he was discharged from the service because he interfered with the shipment of arms and ammunition at South California in 1921. That the department of justice and attorney general had knowledge of Fall's activity. Fall called agent of the department of justice to his private car, telling him to lay off. Gershon is sore and wants to go to Washington to testify. Information received confidentially from former D. J. agent named Hess, who is in Los Angeles."

The committee's request for department files in this matter was refused by the attorney general and it was his stubborn attitude in this matter that led to Daugherty's resignation.

Burns Got Busy.

Burns, as chief of the bureau of investigations, set the machinery of his office in motion to aid Daugherty. A letter written by Burns on May 3 last, addressed to L. C. Wheeler, his agent in Los Angeles, was read into the record. The letter follows:

"I have examined with a great degree of interest the affidavit of Frederico A. Dato, forwarded with your letter of the 24th ult. with especial regard to Dave Gershon and others. I am returning the original affidavit herewith, retaining copies for the files, and I want you to give this matter immediate and very careful and thorough attention with a view to the preparation and early filing of criminal action. I do not know how Bowen stands at the present time, but you probably can make suitable arrangements to procure his testimony against Gershon. It may be considered more advisable to file a conspiracy charge. On the other hand, if you can bring both Dato and Bowen around as witnesses for the government, there probably will be no difficulty in convicting Gershon, who has been posing as a moral uplifter and governmental housecleaner since his removal from the service. The time is getting short, in view of the fact that this case arose in 1921, so it will have to be given early attention."

Justice Agent Quizzed.

Warren W. Grimes, special assistant to the attorney general, who has had charge of Mexican affairs in the bureau of investigations, was placed on the witness stand and was examined by Senator B. K. Wheeler on the attitude and activities of his department in these cases.

"Did you advise the new attorney general of this attempt to indict witnesses subpoenaed by this committee?" asked Senator Wheeler.

"I did not; it would not be necessary."

Thought He Was Crook.

"The reason you wanted him indicted was because he was a moral uplifter and housecleaner?"

"No; we felt he was a crook."

"You waited three years and then after this committee summoned Gershon you got busy trying to indict him?"

"I would have to look at the files. I think the stuff has been coming in on him ever since he left the service, and that this matter originated in Los Angeles. The department has been anxious to open this Mexican situation and our files are at your disposal."

"They haven't been until the new attorney general came in," commented Chairman Brookhart.

Moses Aids Witness.

Senator George H. Moses came to the rescue of the witness.

"Mr. Grimes has been with us a long time and he is perfectly honorable and I resent this effort to impugn his honesty and his motives and charge him with a frameup," said the New Hampshire senator.

"That's what they've been doing over there, trying to frame our witnesses. It's about time somebody impugned motives," was Senator Wheeler's snappy reply.

John Edgar Hoover, acting director of the bureau of investigations, was the next witness.

Mr. Hoover disclosed a fact that Burns refused to disclose on the stand. He said that there are today 607 employés in the bureau of investigations, and that it has fifty-four offices scattered throughout the country with an annual appropriation for the last two or three years of $2,250,000 a year. The attorney general, he said, had instructed him to reduce the personnel, and this was being done rapidly.

Asks $200,000 for Broken Heart

Mrs. Bessie Gottlob, 24 year old divorcee, who has sued Walter J. Hill, son of the late James J. Hill, millionaire rail magnate, for breach of promise.

GIRL WHO SUES HILL TELLS OF HECTIC ROMANCE

Montana Divorcee Lays Broken Heart Bare.

BY MAUREEN McKERNAN.

It's a sad tale of fur coats and desertion, splendid parties for the élite of Montana, and cheap boarding houses, cablegrams of love and cold notes from lawyers, that Bessie Gottlob, 24 years old, pretty blonde, vivacious and tearful, told last night, in recounting her experiences as the sweetheart of Walter J. Hill, the "millionaire cowboy," son of the late James J. Hill, millionaire rail magnate.

Once there was an idyllic love between them, she says. Now there'll be a suit for $200,000 damages if her attorney, Frank J. Tyrrell, can locate Mr. Hill to serve a summons on him.

It all started, Mrs. Gottlob said, when she was living with her husband, Frank Gottlob, on a ranch near Butte, Mont., not far from the $1,250,000 ranch Walter J. Hill owned. They met at parties in Butte.

Tells of Courtship.

During a separation between the Gottlobs, Hill started an ardent courtship, that ended, she says, in her repudiation of her husband for the polished, traveled, fascinating man of 40, who pictured to her the glories she would share with him if she would divorce her rancher husband and marry Hill instead.

Followed a divorce between the Gottlobs, in which little Betty Gootlob, then 3 years old, was given into the custody of her father in order to prevent a suit against Hill for alienation of Mrs. Gottlob's affections.

Hill later secured a divorce from his wife, Dorothy Borrow Hill, prominent St. Paul sportswoman.

Says He Took Her Home.

Following both divorces came happy days in Butte, Mrs. Gottlob avers, during which Hill supported both Mrs. Gottlob and her child, before it was awarded to its father, in the best luxury Butte could afford, she says. Many of the fine furs and clothing she says Hill bought her at that time she has pawned since in order to live.

At Thanksgiving time, 1921, Mrs. Gottlob charges, Hill took her with him to St. Paul when he was called there by the fatal illness of his mother.

He promised to marry her in September, 1922, the month when his divorce would become validated, she protests. So in May she went to Ottawa, Ill., to spend the summer with her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Ira W. Hundley.

Then the Debacle.

Since she was placed on the train in May, 1922, in Butte, kissed goodby by Hill, and told to go home and prepare for her wedding she has had only one word from him, according to her story. That came in November, 1922, from his attorney, J. Bruce Kremer, of Butte, in response to her frantic telegrams to Hill. The note from Mr. Kremer, who had been retained by Hill, she charges, to represent her in her divorce proceedings, said that Mr. Hill did not care to be annoyed further by her.

According to Mrs. Gottlob, Hill was married in December, 1922, to Mrs. Pauline Gillison of New York City.

And though she is suing Hill for $200,000 on the grounds that he was instrumental in her losing her child and the cause of a serious illness, Bessie Gottlob said last night that she still loves the "millionaire cowboy," and that she cannot but hope that his silence can be explained away, and that some day he will come back to her.

HANOVER VOTES TODAY TO SPLIT FROM PRUSSIA

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

BERLIN, May 17.—The work of pulling apart the German nation, which Bismarck unified in 1870 at Versailles, will continue tomorrow when the Guelphs in the Hanover district hold an election for the purpose of "tearing loose from Prussia" and forming an independent republic within Germany. The Guelphs—a family from which came kings of England and which furnished the first four King Georges—are trying to do by peaceful plebescite what Bavaria and the Rhineland separatists have sought to accomplish by the sword.

The Nationalist Germans accuse the French and British of supporting the separationists, claiming that the French are interested for the purpose of weakening Prussia, and the British for sentimental reasons, because the royal house came from Hanover.

Other elements whose object is to destroy or overthrow the present German republic are planning a big day tomorrow. At Fuerstenwalde, near Berlin, and in Schwerin, the Fascisti will celebrate. The communists have issued an appeal to their followers to gather by thousands ready for battle.

SOUTH BEND BARS KLAN PARADE AFTER DISORDER

Lodge Headquarters Are Stormed.

South Bend, Ind., May 17.—[Special.]—The parade of the Ku Klux Klan, scheduled to be held as the closing event of the "May festival," which had attracted thousands of delegates from four states—Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Ohio—was called off tonight.

The cancellation followed a conference of city and county officials with Klan leaders and was the result of a day of demonstrations and opposition to the "festival."

Sheriff Takes Hand.

During the conference Sheriff Cunningham served notice on the city police that the sheriff's office would take charge if the police did not stop the parade.

The first trouble came this morning, soon after klansmen, robed and hooded, took up their posts as sentries in the downtown district and along the highways leading into the city, directing visitors. Automobiles loaded with men started on a tour of the sentry posts, and before noon had unmasked and unrobed every sentry. Several fights occurred.

This afternoon several hundred men stormed the downtown headquarters of the klan, breaking windows. Four young men were arrested, but were released.

Klan Auto Damaged.

An automobile bearing several klansmen was overturned and damaged. Other cars bearing klansmen were chased. Police rescued several other automobile loads.

A bulletin issued by President Matthew Walsh of Notre Dame university instructed students to remain on the campus. "Use your heads, not your fists," was the student slogan.

NICKEL PLATE TELEGRAPHERS TALK OF STRIKE

An ultimatum was issued to the United States railroad labor board yesterday by E. J. Manion, head of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, to the effect that a strike ballot will be prepared by keymen of the Nickel Plate road unless the latter complies with a recent ruling of the board and permits negotiations as to existing differences.

Chairman Hooper of the board immediately summoned all parties to a hearing on May 22.

The Nickel Plate management is secretly circulating a petition with a view of eliminating the union, Mr. Manion charged. It is understood that the trouble exists on the Toledo, St. Louis and Western [Clover Leaf], a subsidiary of the Nickel Plate.

200 Women, 15 Men Gather Here to Root for Peace

Amid a group of Chicagoans whose names have been broadcast by their pacifist endeavors, the international summer school of the Woman's International League for Peace and Freedom was officially opened last night.

The reception was without fireworks. There was a great deal of conversation about a world peace, a universal understanding and a general laying aside of arms. The session was held in the quarters of the Chicago Woman's club in the Fine Arts building, with 200 women and ten or fifteen men present.

The roster of official greeters extended from Miss Jane Addams to Brent Dow Allinson. There was Miss Mary Barteime, a member of the judiciary; Miss Mary McDowell, commissioner of public welfare; Mrs. E. W. Bemis, county commissioner; Mrs. Ignace Ries, Agnes Lester, Julia Lathrop, Dr. and Mrs. Henry W. Cheney, Marian Talbot, Mr. and Mrs. Lorado Taft, and others.

Mayor Not Present.

Miss Mary McDowell made the speech of welcome in behalf of the city. Mayor Dever, whose name was placed at the top of the program, was absent on a vacation. But Miss McDowell made the visitors feel at home.

"We're young here in Chicago," she said in welcoming the workers for peace. "It hasn't been so long ago that we chased the Indians away. I believe the Indians massacred some of us and we massacred some of them. There is a monument or something about it somewhere. But we are young. I hope you will bear with us."

Mrs. Ignace Ries, president of the Council of Jewish Women of Chicago said:

"When I glanced over the list of names of our visitors I was tempted to speak in German."

Miss Lester, president of the Woman's Trade Union league, announced that the working women of Chicago would help in the peace movement. An official greeting from the Chicago Woman's club was given by Mrs. Bertram G. Sippy, who asserted that the clubrooms were always open to the delegates. Mrs. Bemis also spoke. Allinson did not speak.

Dinner at Cordon Club.

Prior to the reception a dinner was served to the delegates at the Cordon club.

This afternoon Miss Addams will preside at a meeting in Mandel hall on the campus of the University of Chicago. James H. Tufts, vice president of the university, will make another address of welcome and the real business of discussing peace and freedom will begin tomorrow in the Fine Arts building, when Ferdinand Schevill, professor of modern history of the University of Chicago, will speak on the "Historic Development of Internationalism."

Some of the delegates who are attending are: Lotta Heller from Austria, Lucie Dejardin, Belgium; Catherine Karavelow, Bulgaria; Dorothy Wong, China; Lucy Woodsworth, Canada; Milena Illova, Czecho-Slovakia; Thora Quistgaard, Denmark; Dorothy Evans, England; Andree Jove, France; Lida Gustava Helmann, Germany, Cor Ramondt, Holland; Eugenia Meller, Hungary, and Maria Johnson from Ireland.

BUYERS' STRIKE OF FARMERS IS HALTING TRADE

Depression Pronounced in Midwest States.

BY ARTHUR EVANS.

Depression of buying power on the farm is now causing a slackening in general industries. The agricultural regions of the middle west, which are industry's greatest customer, are purchasing as little goods as possible.

In many sections there is a "buyers' strike." The effects have backed up until they have reached the factory and distributing centers. Workers in the mills and manufacturing plants of the big cities are now beginning to feel the lessened purchasing power of the "farmer's dollar."

The farmers themselves, generally speaking, are in just about the same economic status they were six months ago, but crippled buying in the countryside is now affecting the employment of factory workers who make goods for the farmer to buy.

Stores Await Customers.

Two tours of nine midwest states, covering 5,500 miles, 2,500 by rail and 3,000 by automobile, just completed, have shown business to be slow in the great bulk of the territory. In spots like Egypt, which embraces the southern third of Illinois, and in some of the dairying regions of other states, buying is quite steady. But for the rest, generally speaking, country merchants are twiddling their thumbs in their shops waiting for customers, and to start things moving many of them have already come out with "special sales," which is not usual for May.

Among farmers the great complaint is still against the disparity in price levels between things the farmer produces and those he buys. There is a widespread feeling, "hunch," or hope, or whatever it may be, that deflation in prices of goods the farmer buys is on the way. Those with little or no money are paring purchases to the bone, anyway, while those who are in good financial shape are holding off, waiting either for lower prices of store goods or for better prices for farm products. Agricultural implements, for example.

The dealers are well stocked, their warehouses are filled with shining new machinery, but purchasers are few. It backs up upon the factory worker in Chicago and Illinois. In April agricultural implement concerns had 3.5 per cent fewer workers than in March.

Auto Purchases Slacken.

The buying of automobiles has slackened. In a few sections traversed farmers were out in fine new cars, some of them having paid first installments in cash taken out of the old rock, but in general the old bus is being kept for another season. It is felt in the factories—In Detroit, industrial employment a week ago was 15,000 below what it was in February, and the automobile industry is running on a somewhat curtailed production basis.

Country merchants are going slow on restocking and are keeping their shelves as skimp as possible. If prices should come down, nobody wants to be caught with goods to be disposed of at a loss. In retail trade, the federal reserve board reports that March registered less than the usual seasonal increase although sales picked up late in April. As to wholesale trade, business increased less in March than in the corresponding period of any of the last five years. In the small cities and villages of the middle west merchants in general say that so far business has not manifested any real pickup from the winter dullness.

Actual Condition Shown.

This recital is not by way of croaking, but is simply a presentation of conditions. Fundamentally conditions are shaping for a forward movement in business, so many experts think, but wherever one travels one finds a prevailing idea that the pickup may not come for several months, and that, indeed, it may not arrive until after the election.

Basic industries appear to feel the slackening somewhat more than some of the minor lines. Through Iowa and Minnesota and some parts of Illinois one finds employment pretty steady and small manufacturing is going on at a fair pace, though not at a breakneck speed.

Cut Down Factory Forces.

This is supported statistically by the report of the general advisory board, Illinois department of labor which says that during April manufacturing concerns having 100 or fewer employes increased their forces 3.5 per cent. At the same time the volume of employment in Illinois industries fell 1.1 per cent during April. The factories of the state are employing 6.7 per cent, or about 40,000 workers, less than they were last June. In 54 classes of industries 31 showed declines in April, and 23 reported gains.

Drop in Men's Clothing.

The greatest drop came in the men's clothing factories. During April this important industry showed the largest decline it has registered in any month during the last three years. The reports show nearly one-fourth of the clothing factories were out of work in April. Here again is seen the effect of the "buyers' strike" on the farms. Cuts in prices by some clothing makers shot business to pieces in a large region, so commercial travelers on the route reported. The farmers firmly believe clothing prices are coming down; they are not buying any more clothing than necessary, and a stagnant market throws men out of work in Chicago, New York, and Rochester.

Employment Curtailed.

In Chicago itself employment dropped 2.4 per cent in April. In New York reductions in employment during April extended to most of the industries and to all the manufacturing districts of the state.

In New England the cotton textile industry has been hard hit. Plants are running on curtailed time. The leather industry has been in the doldrums for months from Massachusetts to Milwaukee, and shoe manufacturing is on a curtailed basis. At Haverhill, Mass., 1,600 shoe workers voted to accept wage cuts of 20 per cent.

Curtailment, too, is increasing in the steel centers. Steel ingot output declined 19 per cent in April. Slackening in the automotive industries is showing its effects here, while buying by the railroads is reported falling off.

Depression on Mining.

Coal mining has been in a state of depression all season and some miners are seeking jobs in the cities. Transient labor is moving into the distributing centers and the labor market is duller than one or two years ago, while as to the farmer he is scrimping along with as little hired help as possible. If dullness should continue through the summer, financial circles look for a wage reduction tendency to show itself in many nonunionized labor lines.

'SPUDS' KAUFMAN CASE CONTINUED; $5,000 BAIL SET

Julian "Potatoes" Kaufman, wealthy South Water street merchant, who gained additional notoriety when he was questioned recently regarding the murder of John Duffy and Maybelle Exley Duffy, was granted a continuance until June 3, when he was arraigned in the South Clark street court yesterday on a charge of attacking E. R. Healy, a traffic officer.

Kaufman is charged with resenting parking directions when accosted in front of the Sherman hotel Thursday night, and, according to the policeman, drew a revolver and beat him about the head. Kaufman's bond is $5,000.

TRANS-EUROPEAN TRAIN WRECKED; COSTS 4 LIVES

TRIESTE, Italy, May 17.—[By Associated Press.]—The Simplon Express, bound from Constantinople to Paris and traveling at seventy kilometers an hour, today crashed into a freight train standing on a siding near the station Postojna, Italy, killing the French baggagemaster and an Italian carbineer and injuring a number of passengers.

The station master at Mategna who had inadvertently routed the express onto the siding, became frantic over his mistake and committed suicide.

Later, a rescue train speeding back with a number of the injured, ran down and killed a peasant woman at the little village of Grignano.

SAVING STOCKYARDS FROM WIND-DRIVEN BLAZE

Fifty fire engine companies, led by Fire Marshal Buckley, fought spreading flames at the stockyards yesterday, averting what for a time threatened to be the destruction of Packingtown. The fire chief received a shock from a live wire, two firemen suffered burns, and a civilian was injured by falling while watching the fire. [TRIBUNE Photos.]

SIFT SHOOTING OF E. P. WESTON, VETERAN WALKER

Kingston, N. Y., May 17.—[Special.]—A wholesale execution of warrants was indicated today as an aftermath of the shooting last Monday of Edward Payson Weston, veteran walker, at his home in Plutarch.

District Attorney Traver of Ulster county refused to say what motive had been advanced for the attack and said that reports to the effect that the successive deaths in the family of Raymond Donaldson, adopted son of the aged hiker, would again be investigated.

The version of the shooting, as told to the district attorney, is that Donaldson had gone to the barn late Monday evening. Weston was standing in the door of the shack. As Donaldson started back from the barn he saw several men advancing on the house. He shouted a warning to his father, who started to close the door. Two shots were fired and lodged in the walker's leg. He fled to an upper room and hid, but the invaders forced an entrance and administered a severe beating to Weston.

Weston has refused to discuss the affair with troopers and will not divulge his opinion as to the shooting. He has made his home in Plutarch with a housekeeper and Donaldson, whom he adopted after the youth's family died off, supposedly "flu" victims.

Court Order Children Returned to Mother

Two of her four children, taken from her home by her estranged husband while she was on a visit to the United Charities, soliciting help for her small family, were ordered returned to Mrs. Veronica Viscont, 4510 South Whipple street, by Judge William Morgan in the Court of Domestic Relations, yesterday.

CITY PLANNERS URGE VOTERS TO O K STREET BONDS

Means 41% Cut in Loop Traffic Jam, They Say.

BY OSCAR HEWITT.

June 2 every good citizen of Chicago will say whether the crowded condition of the central business district shall be relieved an estimated 41 per cent. On that day a vote will be taken on a $10,000,000 bond issue to complete South Water street and another issue of $1,000,000 to finish Roosevelt road.

Traffic experts, after elaborate study, estimate that these improvements, fitted in to others existing, will reduce congestion about 41 per cent.

That "41 per cent" has a world of meaning. The congestion has become so bad that columns of news space and frequent editorials diagnose it as the dominating ill of Chicago thoroughfares.

Consider a 41 per cent reduction in the time that is lost, convenience that is sacrificed, the accidents that happen, the persons that are injured, the street cars that are delayed, the tempers of pedestrians and drivers that are ruffled, and the business generally that is injured.

Is Hurting Business.

These have their influence not only in the loop but in the outlying districts of the city and even beyond the east and north state lines of Illinois. The jam and confusion have become so annoying and irritating that frequently one hears an auto owner remark, "I don't drive my car downtown any more" or has become so bewildering to women and aged men that some of them say, "I don't go to the loop any more, except when I am compelled to."

Reducing such conditions 41 per cent has enormous value to the city. This estimate comes from the Chicago plan commission which has planned a quadrangle of wide streets, circling the downtown business district. They are certain this will take traffic around the loop instead of jamming it through. This quadrangle is formed of Michigan boulevard, Roosevelt road, Canal street and South Water street. The boulevard is finished, Canal street soon will be, and the bond issues cover the other two streets.

One-fourth Through Traffic.

"Many do not know," said Chairman Wacker of the plan commission, yesterday, "that one out of every four vehicles in the loop today is through bound. That is, it does not stop anywhere within the loop. The completion of the quadrangle will reduce loop congestion 25 per cent.

"Seven years ago traffic counts showed that the removal of the produce market [in South Water street] would take 15,714 vehicular trips per day off loop streets. This means a 14 per cent reduction in loop traffic.

"Congestion in the central business district affects every individual in Chicago. The things we eat, the clothes we wear, every article we use costs more because of delays in transit, consequent loss of time, and other increased expense.

"Our railroad terminals and our wholesale and many of our retail houses are all grouped in and around the loop. Every article necessary to existence passes to and fro over our downtown streets before it reaches the consumer."

"In all probability there will be between 65,000 and 68,000 more automobiles upon our streets at the close of this year than there were on Jan. 1 last. In 1923 Chicago issued 263,329 vehicle licenses. Every day there are perhaps 100,000 more vehicles from surrounding suburbs and elsewhere passing in or through Chicago. The continual building of good roads and the consequent increase in the number of out of town cars using our streets makes it essential for us to increase our facilities."

The executive committee of the Chicago Association of Commerce gave their approval yesterday to the two bond issues totaling $11,000,000. The subject was considered and investigated in detail by the association's committee on industrial development and public improvements.

IMMIGRATION BILL, BARRING JAPS, ON WAY TO COOLIDGE

Washington, D. C., May 17.—The immigration restriction bill and its Japanese exclusion provision is in the hands of the state department for study and preparation of a report to President Coolidge.

The measure was passed through its final routine stages today at the capitol, was sent to the White House, submitted by the White House to the labor department, and returned by that department with a report, and then sent to the state department.

President Coolidge has been acquainted with the position of the state department by Secretary Hughes, and the report will be merely presentation in written forms of views already expressed orally by Mr. Hughes.

Indications still prevailed today that the President had not decided what action he would take on the measure. He has until May 29 to act on it. He was understood to be considering two courses of action. One is to sign the measure and issue a statement designed to soften the blow to Japanese sensibilities. The other is to send the bill back to the house unsigned with a message expressing approval of all its provisions except exclusion of Japanese immigration after July 1.

Colored Man Must Explain Why He Asked Gun Permit

Assistant State's Attorney Benjamin Clanton, colored, was called before Assistant State's Attorney Gorman yesterday to explain why he had written to Emil Fisher, a justice of the peace in Cicero, requesting a permit to carry a gun for a south side undertaker. Clanton said the undertaker was a friend of his and had been the victim of a robbery recently and wished some sort of protection for the future.

ECONOMY RULES SCHOOL BOARD BUSINESS END

Plan Saving $200,000 in Effect Tomorrow.

Although expenses in the business department of the board of education have been increasing steadily from year to year as far back as the records are available, John E. Byrnes, business manager, yesterday announced a complete reorganization of the department which will result in a saving of more than $220,000. The plan has been approved by the board and will go into effect tomorrow.

By organizing the department into six bureaus, centralizing the work, and avoiding duplication, Mr. Byrnes said he had been able to effect this saving. It involves the dismissal of more than one hundred union employes.

Opposed by Unions.

In effecting the reorganization and saving Mr. Byrnes' chief opposition came from organized labor. Several conferences between the heads of the machinists', watchmen's, electricians', and carpenters' unions and Mr. Byrnes were held, and he was urged to reconsider. He remained firm in his economy program and demanded "efficiency and loyalty," and finally the labor chiefs agreed to his program.

Mr. Brynes is so bent on economy that he notified the board's architect that any draftsmen that were not busy would have to go. He insisted that he would not retain any one in anticipation of work and those let out in the architect's department will remain idle until the school building program is ready.

How Saving Was Done.

Following are the chief items that are responsible for the saving effected:

Dismissal of fifty-three union employes including machinists, helpers, electricians and others. Saving $105,000.

More than $14,000 was saved in the reorganization of the supply bureau by avoiding duplication and bringing the warehouses under one head.

In the engineering bureau $96,000 was saved by centralizing the work and dismissing some fifty employes.

How Bureaus Organized.

The architectural bureau is to have exclusive charge of the preparation of all plans regardless of what division the project may originate in. Heretofore draftsmen were maintained in all bureaus.

All repairs will be directed by the bureau of repairs. Previously repairs were made by the various bureaus in connection with the work that came under the department head.

The bureau of operative engineering will confine itself to the operation of the 325 schools. Repairs, plans, or purchases will be referred to the other bureaus for action.

WAR IN PACIFIC WOULD FIND U. S. AT FOE'S MERCY

Couldn't Hold Philippines or Panama Canal.

In view of the increasing warmth of the dispute between the United States and Japan over the exclusion act, as well as to the naval discussions in the parliaments of the world, which have shown that the Japanese have been making more progress in the development of their navy than the two major nations in the Washington agreement, The Tribune has made an investigation at the three strategic points where in case of war the Japanese attack might probably be directed. The following dispatches are the result.

BY WALTER WILGUS.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

MANILA, May 17.—In case of hostilities, Japan's army doubtless would rely principally on its aerial defense, although best informed circles state that such a defense would be merely nominal. Japan has a large reserve of air material, but its trained personnel is comparatively small.

Discussing a possible Japanese attack on the Philippines, military observers state that while its war plan naturally has not been made public, it is expected that a Japanese assault would not be directed against Corregidor, but might be through Lingayen gulf or possibly against the coast of Tayabas province.

There are landing places along Tayabas province fifty miles in a straight line from Manila, communicating with Los Banos by a trail suitable for infantry and light field guns.

U. S. Forces in Philippines.

The present forces in the Philippines include the 31st infantry, a battalion of the 15th infantry, one anti-aircraft battalion, two squadrons of air forces, and 500 coast artillery. The total white forces number approximately 2,500 officers and men. The Philippine Scouts, including one regiment of Philippine cavalry, number under 10,000. Added to this are possibly 5,000 members of the native constabulary. These men are under military discipline, but they are not fully armed and their value as troops is not certain.

It is understood that army officials here recently revised the war plan for the defense of the Philippines and dispatched it to Washington. In case of a war the army would hope to raise two war strength divisions, including the present personnel, if time were available. In private conversations army officers state, however, that the defense of the Philippines would be for honor only, as the islands are absolutely untenable against a serious attack.

CANAL IS UNDERMANNED

BY GERALD MARTIN.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

COLON, May 17.—Considerable concern is felt in army circles over the neglect of the canal's defenses and the delay in the acting upon the recommendations which were made following the January naval maneuvers.

The infantry regiment at each of the terminals is sadly under strength, and the aircraft and coast defenses are both below peace strength, which would not be adequate against a powerful enemy. A high army officer said:

"While we are always studying the Pacific side of defenses, there is no big war scare in anybody's mind, and all of our resources are disposed of in a general plan for the defense of the canal, but the lamentable shortage is due to the limited personnel authorized for the army.

"The coast defense artillery on the Pacific and Atlantic sides are now approaching peace strength which is, however, only 20 per cent sufficient to man our guns that are mounted. The reorganization of the Panama department of the United States army as was recommended by the umpires from the lessons learned in the January maneuvers is proceeding, and the command is now working on the regrouping of the units.

"The anti-aircraft guns will be placed under the coast commanders and the reshuffling of others will be made for better defensive tactics. The sixteen inch guns which were discarded following the powers' naval agreement might be used to good advantage on the Canal zone, and congress should hurry the appropriation for the emplacements for them on the Pacific side.

"The army personnel here is below peace strength, while there are transports passing through the canal with troops for the Philippines while the canal needs them. The transports have been used to assist the Japanese in the earthquake zone, while the canal needed the troops, although 500 arrived this week from New York.

"The aircraft needs bombers badly and the infantry regiment at each canal terminal is much below strength, caused by the poor recruiting in the states.

Feel Congress Neglects Canal.

"The general feeling here is that congress is neglecting the canal defenses and is slow in following lessons learned in the recent maneuvers, when the coast defenses on the Atlantic side proved inadequate against enemy long range naval guns and aircraft, with the result that the Pacific fleet was unable to effect a junction with the Atlantic fleet and disaster followed.

"The sea coast batteries must be made to ward off the enemy while our fleet has time to complete the transit. We need sixteen inch guns on the Pacific coast, and to increase the personnel in all the branches of service, especially that of the aircraft, which in the recent maneuvers disclosed a weakness of our air force at France field, which is close to the Atlantic coast.

Flyers Should Be Inland.

"They should be twenty miles inland to enable the flyers to soar and attack at a great height. During the maneuvers the enemy captured the Atlantic air station. The Pacific side has a field but no air force. It has an adequate drydock and accommodation for naval planes with infantry regiment and coast defense artillery, but they are all below peace strength and inadequate.

"The intelligence service here is excellent so far as the limited personnel permits, and they keep tab on possible enemies. A prominent canal man expressed great surprise at the failure to provide the small amount asked for the canal defenses, considering that the canal was built mainly for defense, and yet is today a paying business proposition.

"The lack of military roads here is deplorable."

PROPOSED EVANSTON WAR MEMORIAL

This is the proposed Evanston war memorial to be located in Lake Front park on axis of Davis street. It has been designed as a tribute to the citizens of Evanston who served in the world war and for use in patriotic and civic celebrations.

Details of Design

At its annual meeting next Tuesday evening, at the North Shore hotel, Charles R. Webster will submit a design for a tribute to the men of Evanston who fell in the great war. The design, contemplating a site in the lake front park at the foot of Davis street, comprises a granite stage or platform 100 feet in length, north and south, and 80 feet in width. At the platform's northern and southern ends will be massive granite plinths, 28 feet long and 14 feet high at the center, each plinth bearing in its middle panel memorial sculpture in high relief.

Tablets at the ends will bear the names of the city's war dead. Dominating all will be a flagpole 100 feet high with an embellished bronze base. At the foot of the structure as a whole will spread a grassy amphitheater forming, with the platform, an assembly place of considerable size for various ceremonious events.

It is estimated that the cost of this memorial will be $150,000 or $175,000.

The design, developed with the cooperation of Wallace R. Lane and others, is the product of the collaboration of Thomas E. Tallmadge, Dwight H. Perkins, and Hubert Burnham, all members of the American Institute of Architects, with whom consulted Herman McNeal, sculptor, and the late Henry Bacon of New York, creator of the famous Lincoln memorial at Washington.

HONOLULU "IMPREGNABLE"

BY C. F. GESSLER.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

HONOLULU, May 17.—High officers here decline to discuss the military and naval situation, declining even to be named. Their position is to be prepared at all times for defense against attack from any quarter.

Other officers have repeatedly told me that this island is practically impregnable against attack by any power. A civilian in Hawaii knows less about Hawaii's defenses than Washington or Chicago. A steady expansion of both the army and navy is evident here since the United States annexed the islands.

Oahu is Strongest Base.

There is no question that Oahu is the strongest fortified base in the Pacific. The ancient volcano of Diamond Head, commanding the approach to Honolulu harbor, is one mass of concealed guns and fortifications. Within a stone's throw of Waikiki beach giant hidden guns further guard the harbor.

Five great forts, Ruger, Derussy, Armstrong, Kamehameha and Shafter, are five iron fingers of Uncle Sam's mailed hand in the Pacific. Inland extends the martial wedge of Schofield barracks, where there are more than 11,000 soldiers, with accommodations probably for 50,000.

The army and navy here maintains the utmost secrecy, but I believe Maj. Gen. C. P. Summerall's prediction when he assumed command here in 1921 is being fulfilled. He said then that the army strength in the United States mainland would be sacrificed to maintain Oahu's defenses intact, and also to expand them. The impression here is that more troops and artillery and equipment are arriving on every transport since some years back.

Regarding Japanese residents of the islands, officers indicated that they have no apprehension of trouble.

CONGRESSMAN ADMITS FEE IN PROPOSED DAM

Washington, D. C., May 17.—Representative Swing [Rep., Cal.], author of the Swing bill for government construction of the Boulder Canyon dam, on the Colorado, testified, under questioning before a house committee today, that he was employed as counsel last summer at $25 a day by the Imperial Valley irrigation district, which committee members declared would benefit by the proposed construction.

"I am a man who has to live on my salary," he said, "and I was glad to accept employment during the recess of congress."

He added that his services terminated with the end of the congressional recess.

EMPLOYMENT MEN MEET HERE WITH LABOR EXPERTS

Plans were completed yesterday for the opening on Tuesday of a three day convention at the Congress hotel of labor officials from federal, state and Canadian offices. It is the joint meetings of the International Association of Government Labor Officials and the Association of Free Employment Services.

Among the principal speakers will be Ethelbert Stewart, statistician of the department of labor at Washington, who will discuss "Wastage of Men"; Dr. Royal Meeker, F. M. Wilcox of the Wisconsin industrial commision; Dr. Henry Mock, industrialist; Miss Mary Anderson, Miss Mary McDowell and John B. Andrews.

George B. Arnold, director of labor in Illinois, has charge of the arrangements for the meeting. Assisting him are A. H. R. Atwood and R. D. Cahn.

AUTOS KILL TWO

Two victims—a schoolboy of 6 and an aged man—were added yesterday to Cook county's long list of motor fatalities, which since Jan. 1 totals 204.

Walter Darling, the boy, who lived at 920 Roscoe street, was playing in the street in front of his home when struck by an automobile driven by Samuel Swanson, 530 Montrose avenue. The boy died a few hours after the accident.

The other death was that of Joseph Thornton, 73 years old, of 646 North Clark street, who was struck May 11 by a Yellow taxicab driven by Alvin Galkin, 2020 Birch street, at Superior and Clark streets. The driver was not held.

Hurt in Taxi Crash.

Patrick Murray, 3906 Wentworth avenue, was severely injured yesterday when the taxicab in which he was riding was struck by another cab. He was taken to the county hospital, and after murmuring his name, lapsed into unconsciousness. For a time it was thought he had said, "Packey McFarland."

Coroner Oscar Wolff yesterday announced that forty-one motorists have been held to the grand jury on charges of automobile manslaughter by coroner's juries during the first four months of the year.

Last year, Coroner Wolff said, the record for the same period was twenty-eight motorists held for manslaughter. In 1922 only twenty-one were held.

MILLICENT HOME TO AWAIT STORK, IS SALM STORY

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

VIENNA, May 17.—Countess Salm von Hoogstraeten returned to America with her father, Col. H. H. Rogers, to await the visit of the stork in her mother's home, Count Salm has told his Vienna friends, insisting that all is well between them.

Count Salm remained in Europe only to represent Austria in the Davis cup and Olympic matches, he added. Count Salm will leave next week for Paris, where he will remain until the competition is completed. Immediately thereafter he will return to New York, he asserts.

She Lands with Father.

New York, May 17.—[United Press.]—Millicent Rogers Salm arrived home today, a pale little girl who bit her lips as if to keep from crying. Henry Huddleston Rogers, her gray haired father, was with her, smiling, but saying nothing.

Adrian H. Larkin, Rogers' attorney, shrugged and smiled when asked if it were true the Rogers family had settled $100,000 on the count to induce him to allow his wife to return to the United States without him.

Father Rogers shrugged and smiled when he was asked if divorce proceedings would be started at once to free his daughter of the foreigner.

U. S. AIRMEN FLY THROUGH NIGHT TO SPAN PACIFIC

Battle Snow and Fog in 878 Mile Jump.

Bremerton, Wash., May 17.—[By Associated Press.]—Three American aviators, who yesterday left Attu island and were stopped three and a half hours by a storm, flew the most part of a night to reach Paramashiru island, in the Kurile islands of Japan, it was figured here today at the Puget Sound navy yard.

The revised figures of navy experts gave an elapsed time of twelve hours and five minutes for the first spanning of the Pacific ocean in the air, linking the United States and Japan. The flight was 878 miles, the longest hop in the 27,000 mile trip around the world.

Flew in Fog and Snow.

Lieut. Lowell H. Smith, acting commander, sent his report to Maj. Gen. Patrick from the destroyer John D. Ford, and it was forwarded by the radio station of the Puget Sound navy yard here. The message said:

"Left Attu 11. Snowstorms over Pacific forced us to light off shore at Komandorski at 8. Arrived Paramashiru at 11:30, 180th time. Flight over fog 25 per cent of distance, snow 10 per cent, and excellent weather rest. Planes and personnel okeh. Leave next good weather."

By reason of crossing the 180th meridian the flyers left Attu, which is at the west end of the Aleutians, on Thursday, but arrived at Paramashiru island, which is at the northern end of Japanese empire, Saturday.

The Komandorski islands, which belong to Russia, lie near Kamchatka peninsula. When the fliers left Attu they set a course for Cape Kronatski on the Kamchatka peninsula. The Komandorski islands lie northward from this course.

It was assumed here that the storm led the fliers to change their course slightly so as to take refuge in the lee of the Komandorskis. These islands have been designated as a stop for a British expedition, which has reached Calcutta on its way around the earth from England, the British plan being to use three jumps between Paramashiru island to Attu island.

New Chapter in Air History.

PARAMASHIRU ISLANDS, Kuriles, May 17.—[By the Associated Press.]—A new chapter in aviation history was written today when the three United States army lieutenants attempting to encircle the world by air, descended in their planes to the waters of bleak Kashiwabara bay here shortly before noon, after a perilous dash of 878 miles through arctic winds and snowstorms from Attu island, in the Aleutians. Thus to America goes the honor of being the first nation to succeed in a flight across the Pacific.

Ahead of the American flyers is another long and hazardous hop to Bettobu, on Yetorofu, the main island of the Japanese group and the largest of the Kuriles chain.

U. S. Sailors Amazed.

Amazement was written on the faces of those aboard an American and a Japanese destroyer which were waiting here to receive the expedition as the first of the giant air cruisers was discerned through the misty clouds to the north.

For a week the weather on Paramashiru had been ideal for flying, and daily the skies had been scanned constantly for the planes, but in vain. In view of the favorable weather reports he had sent to Attu the commander of the American destroyer, John D. Ford, was puzzled at their failure to appear.

Early this morning, with overcast skies, rising winds, and a falling barometer presaging a storm, a warning was sent from the Ford in an effort to dissuade the flyers from hopping off from Attu.

Then, at 11:30 o'clock, the quartermaster on watch began emitting a series of yells that brought every one on deck. Approaching from the north was the plane of Lieut. Smith, the acting flight commander. On either side behind him was another airplane, forming a triangle. The watchers were speechless with surprise, for it was almost unbelievable that the flyers, to greet whom the Ford had journeyed northward in a month long battle against the elements, actually were overhead and safe.

The planes in line circled around the ships thrice, dropping lower, then shot off at a tangent across the narrow Kurile strait toward the shores of Shimshu island, a mile away, where plane No. 2 was landed at 11:37.

Planes Nos. 3 and 4 returned to the Paramashiru side of the strait, the flyers surveying the waters in the vicinity of the buoys to which they are now tied. No. 3 banked, straightened, dipped, flattened, the pontoons finally touching the water. No. 4 did likewise.

Feat Thrills Tokio.

TOKIO, May 17.—[By the Associated Press.]—The Japanese exclusion question and all the bitterness it engendered is momentarily forgotten while Tokio thrills over the feat of the American aviators in linking, in the first time in history, American and Japanese territory by air.

American army officers here tonight are receiving scores of congratulations on the success of their comrades, sharing the glory won by the flyers who made the first trans-Pacific crossing.

Japanese army and navy officials are ungrudging in their congratulations. The British and French officers here to receive flyers from their own countries, are heartily applauding the men who have accomplished the most difficult leg in the round-the-world flight. The feat was the sole topic of conversation at the Saturday evening social functions.

POLICE EXPERT ADIMTS KILLING COP IN RUM WAR

Finger Print Man and Pal Run Hootch.

Riverhead, N. Y., May 17.—Patrick Ryan, finger print expert for the New York City police department, and Frank Redfield were reported by authorities tonight to have confessed they shot and killed Special Policeman Ferdinand Downs during a running automobile battle between rum runners and prohibition agents early today.

While posses were searching the countryside for Downs' slayers, Ryan and Redfield were arrested when they drove out of the front driveway of Ryan's home in Astoria just as a truck load of whisky departed via the rear.

Running a Load of Rum.

They told authorities they had engaged in a pistol battle with "hijackers," who had attempted to hold up a load of liquor they were running toward New York.

The arresting officers reported that Ryan, who was driving the automobile, had both hands wrapped in rags, which concealed pistol bullet wounds, and that the truck load of whisky, which was seized, held many cases that were smeared with blood. Both men were arraigned for first degree murder and held without bail to await hearing next Tuesday.

Public feeling ran high in this section of Long Island tonight, for the killing of Downs comes as a climax to a dispute between rival political factions, in which he had been the central figure.

Fired and Then Rehired.

The slain man recently had been removed as special policeman at Southampton, then reinstated, largely through efforts of clergymen, who alleged Downs had fallen from official grace because of his activities against rum runners.

Last night he joined five federal prohibition agents in an automobile scouting trip, on a tip that a big convoy of liquor was to be landed at Montauk and run into New York. They sighted a sedan, lights out, and speeding, overtook it, and ordered its occupants to halt. Instead, the speeders opened fire with a volley of bullets, one of which penetrated Downs' head.

GLOBE GIRDLERS NOW OVER WORST PART OF FLIGHT

U. S. Men First to Cross Pacific by Air.

BY LIEUT. R. J. BROWN JR.
[Chairman World Flight Committee.]

Washington, D. C., May 17.—[Special.]—For the first time in the history of the world, the Pacific ocean has been crossed by air by three airplanes of the United States army air service. The distance of 878 miles which the world flyers covered from Attu island to Paramushiru was figured via Cape Kronotzky on the Kamchatka peninsula, west of the Bering islands. The flight from Attu island to Cape Kronotzky is over 500 miles and is not only the longest flight planned of the whole expedition but is actually the longest flight over open water which will be attempted by the flyers. Therefore, its successful completion indicates that the flyers will have no difficulty in over water flying. They must have been out of sight of land for about six hours, depending upon their compasses for direction.

Forced to Change Base.

The arrival of the flyers in Japan marks their entry into the second division of the flight. They have only three more hops to reach Tokio, the capital of Japan.

The first landing after leaving Paramushiru will be made at Hittikapu, on the island of Yetorofu. It was originally intended that the flyers should land at Bettobu, on the northwest side of this island, but when the United States destroyer Pope, carrying supplies to Yetorofu for the flight, arrived there late in April, it found all the passages into the Okhotsk sea closed by ice floes extending fifty miles into the Pacific ocean. They were, therefore, forced to change the base from Bettobu to Hittikapu on the southeastern shore of the island. The destroyer is waiting the flight there with supplies and fuel.

At Kashiwabara bay, Lieut. Clayton C. Bissell, who is on board the coast guard cutter Haida, and has been charged with making all the ground arrangements and seeing the flight through the first division as far as Japan, was relieved by Lieut. Clifford C. Nutt, who has completed arrangements for the passage of the flight through Japan and he will in turn pass the flight on, as it were, to Lieut. Malcolm S. Lawton, whose division starts at Shanghai, China, the first stop after leaving Japan.

Ready to Rebuild Planes.

The main depot for the flight was established in the first division at Dutch Harbor and at this place the planes were given a complete reconditioning. The depot for the second division is at Kasumiga Ura, the Japanese naval air station, about thirty miles north of Tokio, on the island of Honshu. At this point, new wings, new pontoons and new engines, with the necessary tools and supplies are provided, so that the planes may be placed in as good as new condition. It is 510 miles from Paramushiru to Bettobu; 475 miles more to Minato on the island of Honshu, the next landing place, and 395 miles from that point to Kasumiga Ura. There are only two additional landings in Japan, the one near Osaka, 360 miles farther south; the other at Kagoshima, on the island of Kyushu, Japan, 380 miles from Osaka.

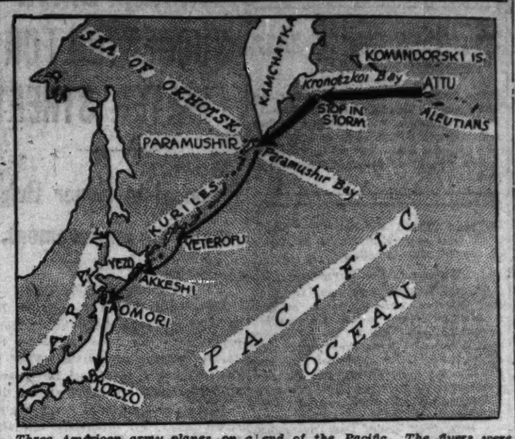
The latest reports indicate that there is a falling barometer at Paramushiru island, with overcast skies and rising winds, which may mean the fliers will be delayed a day or two with bad weather. As soon as they pass Bettobu, the last stop in the Kuril islands, they may expect better weather for the balance of the flight.

Finish Fifth of Trip.

The total distance of the route round the world is 25,331 miles. The fliers have now completed 5,115 miles, which leaves a total of 20,216 miles to be completed. They have passed the worst section of the route and have encountered snow, rain and high winds on each flight and averaged better than seventy miles an hour.

They will, of course, move much faster in better weather and when pontoons are replaced with landing gears at Calcutta, there is every reason to believe, based upon the performance of the flight to date, that it will complete the circumnavigation of the globe within six months as originally planned.

HOW U. S. AIRMEN CROSSED PACIFIC



Three American army planes, on a flight around the world, have finished the longest and toughest jump of the 27,000 mile trip. They flew from Attu to Paramashiru, in the Kuriles islands of Japan, 878 miles across the northern end of the Pacific. The flyers were forced by a storm to make a stop at the Komandorski islands, near Kamchatka peninsula. Their next stop is at Yetorofu island, in the Kuriles chain.

NAVAL AIRMEN SEEK ENDURANCE RECORD IN NEW SEAPLANES

Washington, D. C., May 17.—[Special.]—Two naval pilots tomorrow will attempt to break the duration record for seaplanes in the air.

Promptly at 9 a. m., unless it rains, Lieuts. Frank W. Wead and John D. Price will take off from the Anacostia naval air station in a new type of seaplane, in which they hope to remain in the air at least twenty-four hours.

The plane is known as the CS-2. It was built by the Curtiss company, and a Wright engine furnishes the power.

The bureau of aeronautics is primarily interested in demonstrating that this plane is capable of sustained flight for a long enough time to fly half way across the Atlantic and return as a sea scout, or to hop across the continent, without refueling.

Tomorrow's test will be official. Thirty observers will be on duty throughout the test if the plane remains in the air as expected.

Matteson Woman, Standing on Tracks, Killed by Train

Mathilda Korrupp, 68 years old, of Matteson, Ill., was instantly killed yesterday afternoon when she was struck by an eastbound Elgin, Joliet and Eastern freight train. She was standing on the tracks which run through the business district of Matteson, and apparently did not hear the train approaching.

YOUTH AND GIRL KILLED BY SHOT FROM AMBUSH

Harrisburg, Pa., May 17.—[Special.]—An unknown assailant, possibly a moonshiner, with a single steel jacketed bullet from a high power rifle, last evening murdered Leah Ellenberger, aged 20, a Hollidayburg school teacher, and Harry Ganster, 20, of Marysville.

The provocation of the dual tragedy is unknown, but Cumberland county authorities and the state police tonight are endeavoring to connect the deed with the taking of photographs of illicit stills in the mountains back of Marysville by the youth a year ago.

The bullet which ended two lives simultaneously entered the right arm of the boy, who was standing beside an automobile, penetrated a trench mirror in a vest pocket and pierced his body and then entering the girl at the right side of her chest buried itself in her body.

The bodies were found at 4 o'clock this morning by a band of men, including the boy's father and the girl's uncle, who, all night, had searched the Blue Ridge mountains. The girl was lying behind the wheel of the automobile against the seat back, while the body of the boy was in an almost upright position against the side of the car.

Ganster figured in a shooting affray about a year ago during which a young man was wounded. The shooting came during a comping trip by Ganster and a high school professor. They stopped at a cabin which they said showed signs of having been used by moonshiners. When another party of young men came upon them they barricaded themselves and a gun battle followed.

Ganster and his companion denied firing the shot which wounded one of the men and blamed it on moonshiners hidden in the woods. It was on this trip that pictures of stills were taken.

BALK RADICAL BEING PRO TEM IN PRESIDENCY

G. O. P. Wary of Coup in Contest Emergency.

BY DONALD EWING.

Washington, D. C., May 17.—[Special.]—Possibility of a La Follette presidential election coup, which would leave final decision to the house and place a radical in office in the interim, is being closely watched by President Coolidge.

His advisers are convinced that the danger is great enough to necessitate not only a westerner as vice presidential nominee, but an old guard regular.

But for the President's slight illness today the danger of a radical running mate who would go into office if La Follette carries enough electoral votes to place the decision before the house, would have been placed directly before Mr. Coolidge by some of his advisers.

Indiana Takes Stand.

In Indiana, at least, he would have learned, there is strong sentiment against any one but a regular, and this includes opposition to Albert J. Beveridge.

In fact, it is stated that if any effort is made to place Beveridge on the ticket, Senator James Watson of Indiana will be put forward as a candidate.

Ewing Emison, President Coolidge's Indiana pre-convention manager, and Clyde Walb, chairman of the Indiana Republican state committee, were here to see the President, but had to cancel the appointment because of his illness.

Walb and Senator Watson left tonight for Indianapolis, but Emison remained over in the hope of seeing the President Monday.

They Talk with Butler.

Meantime both he and Walb conferred with William M. Butler, the President's campaign manager and selection for chairman of the national committee.

Nothing was given out as to these conferences officially, but it was learned that the attitude of Indiana party leaders is simply this:

If any effort is made to have the Indiana state convention next Wednesday indorse a Coolidge-Beveridge ticket then every bit of state machinery will be swung into the launching of a Coolidge-Watson ticket, with indications that Beveridge would be wiped out in the state meeting.

Watson Is the Keynoter.

Senator Watson is to make the keynote address there. He has refused to discuss rumors as to his possible candidacy, but long before his name was mentioned here the Fourth and Sixth Indiana congressional districts, usually not very strong for Watson, spontaneously indorsed him.

Indiana party leaders are understood to have placed before Coolidge advisers here their belief that Beveridge, who is known to be looked on with at least some favor by the President, would be a liability rather than an asset on the ticket.

It is pointed out that although he had all the party machinery at his back in his race for the senate he was easily defeated by Sam Ralston, who is looked on by them as the man most likely to get the Democratic presidential nomination.

Beveridge, also, it is added, is hardly the spellbinder orator needed to stump the country during the summer if the President carries out his intention of remaining quietly in Washington.

Fear Election Tieup.

Also, at times—notably in the Bull Moose uprising—Beveridge has been far from a "regular."

With the conviction that La Follette, while not actually expecting election himself, will seek enough votes to throw the matter into the house, and at the same time try to get a radical running mate for Coolidge who could be put into office, the President's advisers are sensing a strong feeling for regularity.

"WACKER DRIVE" SUGGESTED FOR WATER STREET

Proposal to Honor Originator of Improvement.

BY OSCAR HEWITT.

An earned tribute to Charles H. Wacker, chairman of the Chicago plan commission, has been suggested by James Simpson of Marshall Field & Co. in a letter to Mayor Dever and the city council. He proposes that the revamped and improved South Water street shall by ordinance officially named "Wacker drive."

"There is great need," reads Mr. Simpson's letter, "of appropriate rewards, in a democracy, for those who render distinguished public service. We have at this time an opportunity to honor a man who for many years has given generously of his time, ability, and money for the betterment of Chicago. As head of the Chicago plan commission, Mr. Charles H. Wacker has done notable work in planning for the material and esthetic growth of our great city. He has served the public without thought of recompense in any manner or form. It now seems fitting that the people of Chicago should express their appreciation for the splendid results which his untiring efforts have secured to the public.

Opportunity to Honor Him.

"The South Water street improvement will soon be before the voters for approval. With the removal of the produce market the significance of the present name will be entirely lost. A splendid new double decked thoroughfare will be created in its place, and a new name, therefore, will be eminently appropriate.

"What new name could be more appropriate than that of the man who brought about this great improvement? In what way can we honor him more than by indelibly associating his name with this physical feature of the Chicago plan?

Says City Would Approve.

"May I, therefore, as a citizen concerned to see Chicago become the finest city in the world, respectfully submit for your consideration the suggestion of passing an ordinance at this time renaming South Water street and calling it, after it his been widened and improved, Wacker drive? I am confident that this change will meet with the hearty approval of the great body of Chicago citizens."

Mayor Dever will transmit the suggestion to the council at its next meeting, an ordinance will be prepared and submitted, and there is little doubt that the idea will be made a reality.

AL SMITH SEEN AS FAVORITE IN DEMOCRAT DERBY

How He'll Run in South Is Big Betting Factor.

BY PARKE BROWN.

If the Louisville Derby yesterday had been the New York convention of June 24, big and little Democrats hereabouts would have put their money on Al Smith.

With post time five weeks away, the feed box dope may be changed, but with the present entries—Smith, McAdoo, Ralston, Underwood, and a long list of possible starters—there has been for the last two weeks a decided swing in the betting talk toward the governor of New York.

This is not confined to the local Democracy, for leaders from other states pass through Chicago every two or three days and have been talking Smith a little stronger than before; but the tendency has been particularly noticeable in the circle immediately surrounding George E. Brennan.

Brennan Is Cautious.

In what he has said for publication Brennan has been extremely cautious about indicating a personal choice. When the Smith people had hod of him at New York, while he was there to attend the funeral of Charles F. Murphy, their persistent efforts failed to squeeze any assurances from him. And upon his return his private conversations failed to disclose any opinion on his part that Smith was the man.

The big argument in Smith discussions has been around the question whether he could win if he were nominated rather than the usual one whether a man can get the nomination. And the knotty point has been the supposedly dry and "klannish" south and its attitude toward a wet who is a Roman Catholic.

Is He a Winner?

This has been boiled down to the point where there is a more or less general conclusion among the party dopesters that Al Smith would be the man if the south could be shown that he can win. This is based on a definite conviction that the southern states are not so dry in these days as most people think, and that the Klan is not so strong there as it has been pictured.

About this time the dopesters turn to the preparation of a table intended to convince the South that Smith can win.

Make an Estimate.

This is a conservative tabulation recently prepared along those lines:

State.	Electoral Votes.
Alabama	12
Arizona	3
Arkansas	9
Connecticut	7
Delaware	3
Florida	6
Georgia	14

This is five more than a majority of the electoral college.

In their opinion the one big factor in the election in November will be that issue, and they hold that with Smith as the candidate it would not be necessary even to include a wet plank in the platform.

"The candidate himself would be the platform," is what they have said over and over again.

OPERA STAR HUNGRY

ROSA SUCHER.

[Copyright: 1924: By the New York Times.]

BERLIN, May 17.—Rosa Sucher, one of the most famous opera singers of a generation ago, who studied Wagnerian rôles under Richard Wagner himself, is reduced, at the age of 75 years, to living on $3 a month. She vanished so completely several years ago that most people thought her dead, but a German who used to applaud her in the days of her operatic glory, after a long search, discovered that she was living crippled, bedridden, and penniless at a small inn near Aix-la-Chapelle.

The pension allowed her by the government when she left the stage shrunk, following the collapse of the German mark, to 30 marks monthly, from which more than half is deducted for the poor of the village where she lives. So all that is left is about 12 marks, or less than $3.

So great was Frau Sucher's fame in the '80s and '90s that the Germans were accused of making a goddess of her. She was especially successful in heroine rôles of Wagnerian "ring" operas, notably as Brunhilde.

COOLIDGE LEADS JOHNSON BY 3 T 1 IN OREGON VOTE

Portland, Ore., May 17.—Oregon Republicans at the state primary election Friday approved the candidacy of President Calvin Coolidge for the nomination for President by a 3 to 1 vote over Senator Hiram W. Johnson, as shown by steadily mounting returns from all sections of the state.

A late count showed 1,099 of the state's 1,763 precincts giving Coolidge 68,893 and Johnson 21,521.

Senator Charles L. McNary maintains the big lead he took early in the count, and when 1,114 precincts had been tabulated the vote stood: McNary, 57,700; Mayor George L. Baker, Portland, 23,744. K. K. Kubli received 10,363 votes and H. H. Stallard 2,896.

William Gibbs McAdoo was unopposed for the Democratic nomination. Frank O. Lowden of Illinois had a big lead over three opponents for the Republication nomination for vice president.

Plan Parade to Open New $100,000 Subway

Opening of a new $100,000 subway under the tracks of the Rock Island and Western Indiana railways at 91st street will be formally celebrated by a parade next Tuesday, under the supervision of the Chesterfield Commercial club. Officials of the club declare the subway, which was built by the railroads, will relieve present congestion along Cottage Grove avenue and adjoining streets and open a new direct route to the loop.

Young Wife Tries to End Life as Family Watches

Mrs. Clara Kozlowski, 24, shot and seriously wounded herself in the presence of her husband and 3 year old daughter in her home at 2513 Thomas street, yesterday. Kozlowski said his wife has been despondent over ill health for several months and that he had been unable to prevent her attempt at suicide. St. Elizabeth hospital attendants said her condition was serious.

HARRISON VOTED PARTY KEYNOTER FOR DEMOCRATS

Smith and McAdoo Both Approve Choice.

New York, May 17.—The national Democratic subcommittee on convention arrangements today unanimously elected Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi temporary chairman and keynote speaker for the convention, voted final approval of detailed plans for the session and fixed June 16 for a last pre-convention meeting.

Senator Harrison's election was the work of but a minute of formal balloting, as he virtually had been chosen at an unofficial session last night. His most formidable rival for the post was understood to have been Representative Finis J. Garrett of Tennessee, Democratic floor leader.

All Candidates for Him.

Backers of Gov. Smith's candidacy were reported to have been aligned with Senator Harrison from the first. That he also was acceptable to the William G. McAdoo forces was indicated in a statement issued by Mr. McAdoo at his local campaign headquarters.

Members of the sub-committee spoke of Senator Harrison as "a compromise choice," and Cordell Hull of Tennessee, chairman of the national committee, voiced their sentiments when he said:

"The senator was an ideal compromise candidate. He was acceptable to all groups, Smith, McAdoo and Underwood, right through the list. He is a very effective speaker and an unexcelled parliamentarian."

He Voted for Dry Law.

Asked what was Senator Harrison's position toward the prohibition issue, Mr. Hull said: "I would not presume to voice the senator's opinions, but it is well known that he voted for the prohibition legislation down there in congress—the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act."

In addition to Senator Harrison's election, the sub-committee formally installed the National League of Young Democrats as an auxiliary of the party and agreed to share headquarters with it at Madison Square garden.

Deny New Trial and Send Mrs. Uncapher to Jail

Mrs. Elizabeth Uncapher, 1456 West Madison street, found guilty and sentenced to life imprisonment for the murder of Samuel Bolachoff, 1753 Washington boulevard, formerly a boarder in her home, yesterday was denied a new trial by Judge Frederick R. De Young. Sentence was pronounced by Judge De Young yesterday and she will be taken to the Joliet penitentiary at once.

Sinuous Sirens Plan Raid on Madison Square Wallets

New York, May 17.—[Special.]—New York may be as safe as a home town church sociable for the visiting Democrats next month, and then again it may not. It all depends upon which of the ladies are the brightest.

The police department has learned in some underground fashion, as police departments do, that all Europe's Broadway butterflies, all the gold diggers, and lady vamps and sob artists are heading for New York to prey upon the innocent Democrats. Their goal is Madison Square Garden, and they have unladylike designs on the fat wallets of the gentleman farmer, the prosperous western lawyer, and all the other guileless politicians who will gather here to pick a presidential candidate.

Satin and Rouge.

Every steamer is bringing them in, says the police department. You can just see them, sinuous sirens in slinky black satin an dthe latest shade in rouge, with a glycerin tear just waiting to fall from an artful eye. If hhey are young enough they will talk to the politicians about how lonely it is by oneself in the big city. If they are a little past that age, they will ask advice about politics or finance in their own home towns. And all this time it will be June, and Madison Square will be looking its most enchanting, and the delegates presumably won't mind stepping out a little to take their minds off the heated problem of politics.

But—and here's where the rest of the ladies come in—the police department is going to protect 'em, possibly in spite of themselves. Already watching for lady crooks are the lady detectives. Mrs. Mary Hamilton and her policewomen are all ready to pull the hair—no, well, anyhow to pull in any siren who attempts to prey on a Democrat, willing or unwilling.

That Tearful Smile.

The lady detectives are well acquainted with the habits of adventuresses as well as their names and faces. They are already patrolling hotel lobbies, watching for the black satin, the ash-colored rouge, and the glycerin tear, or whatever it is that the particular siren will have on at the moment. It isn't half as likely, they say, that the Democrats will be tempted to buy gold bricks as that they will fall for the tearful smile and the wistful hand of some fair and cunning adventuress.

At the last chamber of commerce convention here and at the Shriners' convention in Washington last summer—New York's policewomen were on the job protecting the innocent Main streeter from the Lorelei of many lands. So it will be next month. And the duel, if any, will be between the ladies.

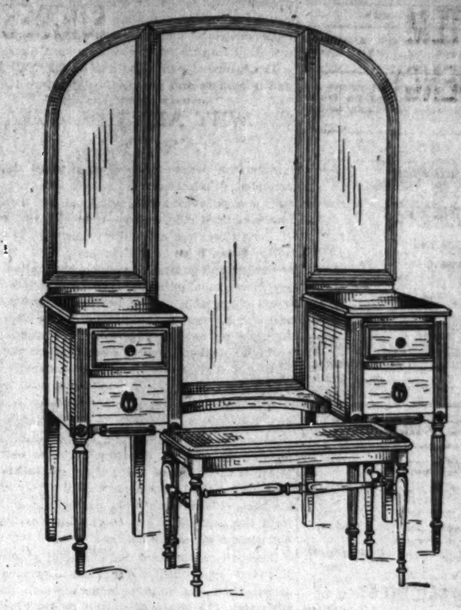
Scholle's Good Furniture



Hepplewhite Vanity Case—Either Solid Mahogany or All American Walnut—Special Price, $59.50.

HERE'S a special little "plum" which we are able to hand you; it will be pleasing to anybody who likes plums.

We found at one of our factory sources of supply a small group of "vanity dressers"—it's not a very good name for them, but that's what they're called. A pretty dressing table with a long center mirror and a smaller wing mirror at each side.

Every woman wants such a dresser; many have them. If you haven't, here's your opportunity. The price is astonishing—$59.50. Under ordinary circumstances such a piece would be sold at $100 or more; but we took the whole lot off the factory's hands and will sell them to the same advantage to you.

Scholle quality, of course; and the Scholle guaranty of satisfaction goes with each one—money back if you're not satisfied.

We have only a few of these—fifteen or twenty in all—at such a price they should be quickly sold. We hope, if you'd like one, that you'll be here early.

The list below mentions some other bargains. We keep this list fresh all the time; there's always something here that's marked down for quick disposal.

THE DAWN OF AN ERA.

Senator Lodge has remarked that the immigration bill is the most important piece of legislation enacted during his career in the senate. It is, in our opinion, more than that. It is the most momentous domestic event since the civil war. It is far more than an act of legislation. It is the birth of an era.

The implications and possibilities of the new policy expressed and established in this law are too many, too complex, and too far reaching to be specified even in a very thorough editorial survey. We shall venture from time to time to discuss them in editorials treating the economic or industrial, the sectional, social, and political, the national and international effects to be expected from this epoch making law. We believe, for example, that the new era will see changes in the conditions of American labor, a stimulation of American genius for invention and organization which will be little if at all short of revolutionary, but revolutionary in the best sense, the sense of progress for all, of construction and advance, not destruction and retrogression. We believe the new era will see a better distribution of industry and financial power because of the new policy. We believe the new era will see the return of the American family through a new sense of security from the competition of aliens of lower standards of living.

As for the political and cultural results to be confidently looked for in the new era, they are even clearer, in our opinion, than the transformation of the industrial and industrial-social situation we have referred to. With the new era the American nation and American civilization will begin to evolve as an entity and organism more completely and truly sovereign and independent than it has been or could be while our population was in the state of flux produced by a perpetual inflow of aliens, even those who were most closely related to the original stocks. The new era is going to show very early a reduction in the political profits of organized alienism. The spirit of American nationality is going to have a new birth, is going to be harmonized and intensified as it has not been perhaps for half a century, if ever, save in wartime, when conditions have cheated us of many of its benefits. The nation is going to think of its future as something lying solely within its own will and intelligence, and it is going to settle down to evolve its own character and personality with a sense of security not felt for many years.

This intensified sense of an American destiny, we believe, is the most important effect to be looked for from the new policy and in the era it inaugurates. The new policy assures the American future to the American people. It assures the enjoyment to the American people of their own destiny. The danger, the certainty, that our future would belong to some one else is gone.

Our rich inheritance, and that which we are building upon it, are assured to us and to our posterity. This is just. This is beneficent. We shall breed Americans for an American destiny. We shall never be without the inspiration of other peoples and other cultures. But we shall not have them undermining our American structure or imposing upon us as self-conscious alien forces demoralizing the harmonious evolution of our national character.

The new immigration law is a new declaration of American independence, not less significant and epoch making for America and the world than the declaration of 1776.

COMPLETE THE FOREST PRESERVE SYSTEM.

Land is going up in the suburbs. With 11,000 acres designated for Cook county forest preserves still to be purchased, further delay will be costly both in money and in recreational values.

Nothing is surer than the extension of Chicago's interest in forest preserves, and the expense of maintaining preserves for which there may not now be a pressing need will be less than the margin in increased real estate values paid by delaying purchase. The preserves today are full. Seven million persons used them last year. Tomorrow they will be overcrowded.

Nor will the forest preserve system be limited to Cook county. Adjoining counties, as they realize that their once remote farm and forest lands are now well within the metropolitan district of Chicago, will adjust their policies to that outstanding fact. For Chicago will expand and carry with it higher real estate values and more business into those communities that offer recreational opportunities, out of door life, and a chance for health for children. Already Du Page county has made progress towards a forest preserve system. Lake county is farther behind, but must come eventually to a similar policy. Forest land bought now for public purposes will save higher prices later when the inevitable lopover of Chicago into other counties comes.

Buying now what would be bought later for forest preserves in Cook county or elsewhere will also help to stabilize suburban conditions. The outward growth of Chicago will adapt itself to the defined areas of forest preserve. Land values over a long period will suffer fewer fluctuations. Forest preserves will be better organized into the metropolitan system of suburban homes, industries and transportation. The preserves will not come as an intrusion into an otherwise organized district.

The future city must be half country. Its health and happiness and prosperity depend on it.

WHY AMERICA GOES TO WAR.

American wars have always been children's crusades. We have always trotted into them trustfully enough, armed with a hullabaloo of hosannahs and a squirrel rifle, and we have always come out sadder, wiser, but somehow victorious. Long casualty lists, huge costs in gold and labor, a wrenched and gaping economic organization which profiteers have pilfered, have been a few of the items chargeable to our beatitude. But America will not be denied the luxury of her innocence. Nor can we entirely regret it. And another war, no doubt, will find us, as ever, singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers," without any soldiers.

Thus the Christian Science Monitor's proposition to maintain peace by eliminating all profit and privilege from wars seems peculiarly inapropos in America. Its innuendo that greed for profits brings on war in America does not fit. The old witch story of the ring of calculating capitalists engineering a fight between nations is hardly applicable here. Planned wars are carried out efficiently from the beginning; and calculating deviltry cannot possess an entire nation.

Greed there has been and shameful profiteering. But the opportunities for such disgraces have arisen from the unpreparedness which pacifists advocate. The strain of sudden readjustment, the sudden call for supplies at any price, opens the gates to economic traitors who otherwise could be shut out. Conscription of capital and labor in the next war is fair, no doubt, in theory and, if it will work, should be effected. One man's money is no more sacred than another man's body, but as a measure to stop war in America it is beside the point.

Never was the materialistic interpretation of history—Marxian formula—less applicable than in the history of American wars. Fair examination of the driving motivations behind American wars will show that it was not materialistic profits that caused the nation's action. Our war making has been singularly naive and innocent. Our impelling motives have ever been emotional, never commercial, and based upon a moral hypothesis. Those who know America know this best.

JAPANESE EXCLUSION.

We believe it would be well if the country were informed of the reasons which impel President Coolidge to insist upon the elimination of Japanese exclusion from the immigration bill. The President called various members of congress to the White House, but the only announcement made was that the government wishes to accomplish exclusion by treaty and to avoid doing it by statute.

Now and again a President asks congress to do or not to do something which he intimates will have grave consequences in international affairs and the nation seldom can do more than guess at the danger suggested. Probably the best remembered instance is that of Mr. Wilson in 1913 telling congress that unless congress repealed the exemption of American ships from Panama tolls he would not know how to deal with more intimate matters of graver import.

There was then pending this same dispute with Japan as to the right of the United States to determine who might be granted the privilege of coming in, of owning land and of entering upon citizenship. There had been a threat, but Mr. Wilson did not explain it. We could guess that it came from Great Britain and Japan, then in alliance. We know that the Japanese ambassador had called on the President and we know that the President stopped the Japanese exclusion bill then. He and Mr. Bryan also were badly worried by the California land laws. We are convinced that threats preceded the temporary settlement of the question prior to that in the gentlemen's agreement.

We do not know of another competent nation whose right to exclude is questioned. Australia excludes the Japanese. The Japanese themselves not only were the fiercest of exclusionists, but they were inhospitable, and Perry's mission to them was to persuade them by a display of force to give American whalers and merchant ships humane treatment. They did not want to admit even a ship in distress into their ports.

In principle the entire immigration act is an exclusion act. It does real economic damage to the Italians whose most valuable export has been labor to the United States. That was a source of national wealth and it will be stopped. If a nation's right to breed a homogeneous people were denied it all its national sovereignty might as well pass away and the country be regarded as unclaimed and inviting exploration and settlement, the strongest people to get the best.

The Japanese concede, even in the gentlemen's agreement, that the influx of Japanese labor is inconsistent with American well being. They do not concede, thereby, that they are inferior. When the United States puts into the definite form of law what is conceded in diplomacy it does not assert that the Japanese are inferior.

We might with better reason say that Japanese interference with American domestic legislation is an assertion that Americans are inferior. The continuing intimation that something will happen to us if we do what any competent nation is granted the inherent right to do is about as serious an affront to national pride as could be found.

These threats have been in the air and congress is disposed to ignore them. We do not know that President Coolidge is affected by them. We do not know that he has received them, but Secretary Hughes of the state department received one from the Japanese embassy, although the Japanese ambassador said it was not a threat and Mr. Hughes said he did not think it was.

We think it would be better if the country were better informed. In our opinion, serious trouble cannot be in the difference of method, but if the Japanese are abroad for pretexts to accomplish another purpose it is useless to be backing down all the time and it might be dangerous.

We do not pretend to understand Japanese national psychology. The play of such psychology is very wide. Japan is the overlord of Asia by reason of military strength. It is probable that the Japanese intend to maintain, if they can, a distinction between themselves and all other Asiatics and have that distinction proved in American law. We may exclude all other people of Asia except Japanese. When we come to the most powerful Asiatics they will do their own excluding.

Possibly a Japanese does not intend that a Chinaman shall look at him with a look which says that American law has leveled the samurai to the silk merchant. We have the same reason for excluding the Japanese as we have for excluding the Chinese. Japan wants us virtually to acknowledge that we are afraid to apply the rule of our national development to its people.

Of all wars a war of pride would be the worst, but there is something more substantial than pride, valuable as that imponderable is, in the American position. The fact that our right alone of all nations is questioned in this matter is indicative. America never has been quite accorded a true nationality. Possibly the rest of the world does not consciously phrase its idea, but it is the idea which followed the news of the discoveries made by Columbus, the Cabots, and the steel jacketed explorers who followed them.

America has been a land of opportunity, a haven and asylum, a place to which the people of all nations might turn to improve their individual fortunes and to remove the pressure and the discomforts, even misery and death, which resulted from overcrowding populations and lack of sustenance at home.

Gradually this land of opportunity is confronted with problems which it must solve if it is to be a nation and gradually the doors are closed. Other peoples resent this as if they were deprived of rights which dated back to Columbus.

The world must find another solution of the questions which have been answered by immigration into the United States. This was the easiest, but there are others which will serve. There are other parts of the world into which the surplus may be distributed. Many peoples are offended by our program. The Japanese openly protest. If we weaken we concede that we are uncertain and timid. The consequences of that might be most unfortunate.

THE COMMUTER'S TICKET.

The shad and the wild plum blossom and trilliums are still white. Even the white oak has a new haze at the top. In late May even along the lake one may believe in spring on a day now and then when the wind is from the south or west. The honeysuckle is in leaf and the firs have started their new growth. It is a pleasant land of new green and promise.

Through snow to roses and the roses are just ahead, wild roses by wood fern in the shade of wild grapes which soon will be giving perfumes to the evening. The brown thrasher sits in a treetop and a cascade of song comes down. Peonies have buds and new peas are a foot high. A bold world again and stirring. A few dried leaves are held by the oaks. They are of the dead year. The new year is green. But which is the portent?

The cardinals which have been reserved and aloof all winter are seeking a nesting place in the wistaria vines by the house. There is a killer in the woods, a great owl. An audacious crow is tearing the robins' nests apart and eating the eggs. The jays have chased a gray squirrel through the tops of six trees and to the ground. The cowbird is seeking to impose eggs on a conscript mother. In the new green the world seems to be Eden. Or is it the jungle, smothered in blossoms but the jungle still? Green or brown leaf the answer, killer owl or confiding cardinal, the brown thrasher in song or the crow at the dirty work, or all of them, and both Eden and the jungle?

PHONE ETIQUETTE.

As a target for grouches the telephone, like the newspaper, the weather, bacon for breakfast, and other semi-public utilities, has become an avenue of emotional release. It is the moral equivalent for a fight for most Americans, and as a dumb peacemaker should be respected. But manners over the phone nevertheless are possible. How to be a gentleman though phoning is an issue worthy of a policy.

If you put in a call: Be on the wire when your party answers. Tell your name without preliminary helloes. Give your message briefly; you may have called your party away from a pressing engagement. Lead the conversation, as well as be the first to say "Good-by."

If you receive a call: Take the wire at once, or refuse to take it at all; don't keep the party waiting. When answering give your number or name without prefaces. Don't interrupt others by receiving unnecessary calls in their presence.

In general: Talk slowly. Talk gently. Talk with a smile in your voice. Don't use business phones unnecessarily for personal calls. Remember that over the telephone your voice is yourself, and Sir Lancelot at the telephone could not do better.

TO THE MOTORIST ON A COUNTRY ROAD.

Motorists who try to get out in the country today on roads may feel that they will have to give up their Sunday trips because of the discomforts and congestion. They needn't, but they will have to do something about it. The countryside invites now, but the roads retard. They are not wide enough and there are not enough of them. This is because the motorists who pay the money to the state for roads are not getting anything back in roads. Hence the jam on the roads today and the discomfort where there ought to be pleasure. Look it over and think it over.

Editorial of the Day

AGAINST PUBLIC OWNERSHIP.

[Medill School of Journalism.]

Superpower is not a prospect of the near future. It is a fact. The Pacific coast needs only a few miles of wire to connect British Columbia with Mexico. The middle west needs only twenty-five miles to connect Louisville, Ky., to Fargo, N. D. The middle eastern states have it; New England has it.

How to manage this new giant? What kind of a harness will best direct it? Who shall have title? Who shall have control?

After all is said and done, the question is: Shall the government own and operate this vast system? Or shall private individuals own and operate it subject to government regulation?

The function of government is to secure the rights, liberties and happiness of the governed from which it derives its power. Other than this, government has no unction; further than this, it is encroaching on the rights and liberties of the governed. The function of any public utility, such as superpower, is to render service to the public. The only justification for public ownership, then, is to render better service than can be rendered privately, or to render the same service at lower rates.

Has public ownership done this when tried? Petty, local successes on a small scale cannot be used as criteria; the largest scale yet tried is far below superpower standards.

What has political expediency done to business when tried? Ruined it!

Super-power will require the constant application of sound business judgment, expert operation, skilled management, and above all, continuity of wise business policies. Public ownership and operation cannot get these. Private ownership with government regulation.—L. H.

CANCERS.

FREDERICK HOFFMAN of the Prudential says it is a fundamental error to seek or to hope to find a single cause responsible for cancer. There are many conditions that go under the one name—"cancer"—and for these many conditions there are many causes. Among these overeating is one. What is known as the proper weight is merely the average weight of people of a certain height, age, and sex. The average weight commonly known as the proper weights, Hoffman says are easily 25 per cent in excess of the weights that are best for a thoroughly healthy and vigorous existence. Statistics show that cancer is more prevalent among the overfed; and the lean and hungry kind rarely succumb to it.

One way to avoid cancer is to refrain from overeating, and an excessive number of meals a day. Among savage peoples cancer is rarely encountered. The Negro in this country, participating in the diet, customs and habits of American civilization, is losing some of his immunity to cancer. While the cancer rate of Negroes in America is less than that of white men, it is much higher than that of Negroes in Africa. The reason savages have no cancer, Hoffman says, is probably because of their simple diet.

When it comes to cancer of the mouth, men who smoke are much more subject than men who do not smoke. Men who smoke pipes have more of it than men who smoke cigarets. Women are freer than men. When smoking a pipe becomes common among women, they will have cancer of the mouth as men now do.

In India, 71 per cent of 1,700 cancers were located in the mouth. This great disproportion of mouth cancer in India is due to the custom of chewing betel nuts. Cancer of the mouth is rarely seen in India except among the betel nut chewers.

In parts of Great Britain, the chimneys are cleaned by men known as chimney sweeps. A chimney sweep sits astraddle the top of a chimney while he operates a long handled broom. These chimney sweeps are very apt to develop cancer of the leg, in the places of his anatomy which are pressed on as he sits astride the chimney. The cancer in chimney sweeps are due in part to the scraping of the skin by the bricks of the chimney, but principally to the soot which gets into the irritated skin.

People who work around X-rays are liable to develop cancer in those parts of the body that are frequently exposed to the rays. Since X-ray operators have learned to work behind lead screens, X-ray cancers are infrequent.

Neglected chronic infections and chronic inflammations are responsible for many cancers.

Some day men will want to keep 100 per cent well all the time. They will not permit mild, unimportant infections to persist. When that day comes they will find that cleaning up unimportant infections sometimes prevents important cancers.

STARTS OPIUM HABIT.

L. J. W. writes: What effect will paregoric, taken daily, have on a person?

REPLY.

It will establish the opium habit.

CHILD NEEDS TRAINING.

Mrs. K. N. writes: I have a baby boy who is going to be 2 years old soon. He gets up several times during the night to drink milk. Is that good for him? If not, how can I stop him, for when I try not giving him any he cries something awful and is very cranky. He sleeps once during the day, sometimes for three or four hours, and in the evening I have to keep him up very late. He does not speak yet, only says one or two words.

REPLY.

A child 2 years old should not eat between 6 p. m. and 6 a. m.

The way to stop him is to stop him.

Let him cry himself to sleep.

One or two nights will cure him. Give up that much time. The end will justify the sacrifice.

Plainly, your child needs training. He is backward.

OFFICER'S TRAINING PAY.

Chicago, May 10.—[Friend of the Soldier.]—I have received a notice from the office of the adjutant general at Washington telling me that my claim for difference in pay between the amount received and $100 a month for time spent in the third officers' training camp has been settled and allowed. However, they go on to state that the appropriation for these claims is no longer available and that the amount due will be forwarded when the appropriation in question has been made by congress. Can you find out when this will be? A. S.

Some of the men in the third officers' training camp were taken care of in the first deficiency bill. Three bills are now before the military affairs committee of the house, but none has yet been reported out, to take care of the claims of the remaining men of the third camp and those in the fourth officers' training camp who have still to receive the difference between $30 a month and the $100 a month afterwards allowed.

DEMANDS DECORATING.

Chicago, May 15.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—I am paying $135 a month rent and my lease plainly states that the kitchen and bath are to be decorated this month. The landlord refuses to comply with this requirement. What can I do?

As long as the landlord breaks his part of the contract, can I break my lease? H. R. H.

Notify the landlord that if he persists in his course you will hire the work done and deduct the amount from your rent.

This course suggested would be safer than breaking your lease.

2. If not, may she retain her maiden name without process at law?

3. If an illegitimate child uses its father's name, and he objects, has the father any recourse at law? S. E. S.

FROM THE CUBAN CONSUL.

Chicago, May 14.—In your edition of yesterday and under the heading, "Why Are Cuban Revolts? Well, It's Just Cuba," appeared an article in which your correspondent in Havana quotes an interview with an old resident of Cuba. According to your said correspondent, the interviewed foreigner, whose name is not given, after twenty-five years of residence in Cuba, seems to be dissatisfied. Why, then, does he remain in Cuba? Why has he not left the island where, I am sure, such persons as I presume he is are not desirable?

His statements are perfectly childish and unfounded, and very much in contrast with statements made by so worthy a gentleman as Mr. Charles E. Mitchell, president of the City National Bank of New York. Mr. Mitchell returned recently from a social and business visit to Cuba, and upon his return was interviewed by Mr. B. C. Forbes of the New Orleans States, and said interview was published in said publication on April 24, 1924.

In his statements, among other things, Mr. Mitchell said: "Cuba fills a vital place in the world; think of it, this little island of 44,164 square miles—about the size of the state of Pennsylvania—with its 3,122,000 people, last year exported $440,000,000 worth of products. It imported $228,000,000 worth, leaving a balance of $212,000,000 in favor of the Cubans, equal to $350 per family. That's for only one year. How can a people showing such a balance sheet fail to prosper? A few weeks ago I motored from Havana to Cardenas, about sixty miles to the east, over very fine roads, and motored still farther west of Havana over excellent roads. Cuba's finances are in sound shape. You can best judge what I think of Cuba's prospects by the fact that we have just bought quite a number of additional bank buildings through the island and are erecting in Havana one of the most attractive modern bank buildings to be found anywhere. Our deposits in Cuba have multiplied fourfold within three years. The Cubans are a polite, friendly people, the kind tourists like to meet."

The foreigner interviewed by your correspondent said that in Cuba "the whites and Negroes mix, and that the average workingman works less than 160 days yearly." Permit me to state in reply to these statements that the aforementioned foreigner must have been asleep during his long residence in Cuba. The whites and Negroes do not exactly mix in Cuba, but they respect and treat each other with due consideration, because the general average of the colored people of Cuba are well educated and courteous and invariably know enough to keep to their place. Besides, the whites in Cuba are well aware of the fact that the Negroes are also human beings, consequently accord them the treatment to which they are perfectly entitled.

With regard to the statement that the laborers in Cuba work only 160 days yearly, I most emphatically deny such asseveration as untrue, because, if such were the case, Cuba certainly could not produce nearly as much as she is now producing, notwithstanding the fact that the scarcity of laborers in Cuba is very keen.

I trust that you will be kind enough as to concede this writing a space in the columns of your valuable paper.

F. P. CAVALLERO,
Cuban Consul.

FRANZ WANTS NO FINE ARTS BUILDING.

Chicago, Ill., May 9.—Wish to call every voter's attention to the proposed bond issue on the Fine Arts building in Jackson park. In my estimation it is nothing but a waste of money and only for the benefit of a chosen few.

Would suggest that the city spend that proposed bond issue for cleaning streets, paving alleys, and help abolish railway crossings. Another money saver would be to abolish the fair price food commission as long as they permit men to charge 10 cents for a cinnamon roll. They have outlived their usefulness.

FRED O. FRANZ.

FROM HERMAN BUNDESEN.

Chicago, May 14.—I have read with a great deal of interest your editorial of May 13, entitled, "Board or Department of Health," and I quite agree with you that it seems to be a mistake to revert to a board for Chicago if any way of avoiding it can be found.

HERMAN N. BUNDESEN,
Commissioner of Health.

ALL ABOUT SEWAGE DISPOSAL.

Chicago, May 13.—Why does not Chicago dispose of its sewage in a sanitary, scientific, cleanly manner? Why does it wish to spread its filth over the Mississippi valley, contaminating its noblest streams, rather than do the decent thing of turning its sewage into clean water and fertilizer?

Why does Chicago jeopardize the commerce of the northwest by lowering lake levels so as to spoil harbors rather than take care of its own filth in a way which a great city would do, a way entirely feasible to a community big enough to undertake the care of a population as big as Chicago's?

Chicago has a great opportunity to show its size or to show its meanness and its smallness.

THE TRIBUNE has a great opportunity to show big, worthy leadership instead of mob leadership, encouraging the mob to get what it wants no matter how much it may injure others as well as itself in getting it?

Are Chicago and THE TRIBUNE going to use this opportunity to demonstrate innate meanness and littleness or to demonstrate the greatness which means vision and generosity?

It has become painful to observe Chicago crying for water with which to dilute and hide its filth so that it may dump it unnoticed upon the people of the Mississippi valley, crying like a spoiled child for a sugar teat.

Why do you not look at the situation as it is? Why do you not set an example to the whole world of the greatness which does a big thing in a big way?

Why do you not lead in calling a halt upon the stream and lake and shore contamination which is becoming a national disgrace?

Just sit down and think this over and turn a new leaf. Very truly yours,

IVAN WILLIAMS.

IS THE SOUTH DRY?

Chicago, May 12.—I was interested in your editorial, "A Wet in the South," in today's TRIBUNE, referring especially to Gov. Smith of New York.

Personally, I have always taken the south's "dryness" with a very large grain of salt. You cannot make me believe that the men of Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Georgia and the Carolinas, as well as the Virginias, prefer water to a good highball. No! No!

The reason the south has been leaning toward "dryness" is on account of the "colored brother." So the southern gentleman thought it was a good thing to take it away from the "colored brother" or make the price so high that it was out of his reach. So, on that score, there is nothing to prevent Gov. Smith from sweeping up the solid south.

Another possible menace to his candidacy from your point of view is the danger of the religious issue. This, coming from the newspaper which has just named its pet magazine "Liberty," sounds strange. Is it possible that in this "free" United States there is such a thing as "religious disability"?

Gov. Smith should not be a weak candidate on that score, either. My opinion is that if Smith got the nomination he would sweep the country like a prairie fire!

WATCHMAN KILLS PAUPER; POLICE FOIL MOB ATTACK

Railroad Workers Nearly Lynch Slayer.

Arrival of a police patrol yesterday saved Dewey J. Norman, a watchman, from the violence of an angry mob of railroad workers in the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul yards at Morgan and Fulton streets, just after Norman had shot and killed a man whom he accused of stealing potatoes from a freight car.

The victim of the shooting was John Bigol, 44 years old, 826 North Racine avenue, father of a family and said to have been out of employment. Three bullets were fired, one penetrating his heart.

Story Conflicts with Witnesses'.

Norman said that Bigol turned and ran after he had been ordered to halt. He then fired, he said. Norman was taken to the Des Plaines street police station for questioning at the hands of Capt. Ira McDowell. His statements are said to conflict so decidedly with those of witnesses that a charge of murder may be placed against him.

An account of the tragedy was given by Fred Ecklund, 919 Orleans street, a driver for the Spahn Teaming company, who happened to be working near by.

"I heard three shots and ran around the car in time to see a man fall," said Ecklund. "Norman was walking away in a hurry and I ran and grabbed him.

"'What about this?' I asked him. He said nothing, but just then several workmen ran up and I heard one say: 'That's him. Let's lynch him.'"

Learn of Grudge.

Capt. McDowell was informed that ill feeling had existed between Norman and Bigol for some time.

Ecklund declared that the potatoes Bigol was accussed of stealing were culls which had been discarded by truckmen unloading the car. It is customary, he said, for poor people of the district to freely enter the yards and salvage such discarded vegetables.

The body was taken to Sheldon's morgue, 912 West Madison street. Bigol's two children were said to be on a farm near Chicago.

SHOT TO DEATH

John Bigol, who was killed yesterday by a special policeman for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul when he tried to take some potatoes spilled from a box car.

DEATH CLAIMS P. M. FOLEY OF MULLIGAN GUARD

Patrick M. Foley, 94 years old, last surviving member of the Twenty-third Illinois regiment, the "Mulligan Guards" of civil war days, and noted criminologist, died yesterday at his home, 5037 West End avenue.

From 1867 until the first of the present year, Mr. Foley was connected with the Pinkerton detective agency. He was one of the real pioneers of Chicago, coming here from Ireland in 1848.

At the time of his retirement, Mr. Foley was an inspector in the Pinkerton organization. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Katherine Foley, and two sons, Maj. Thomas P. Foley and Dr. Edward A. Foley, the latter assistant superintendent at the Dunning state hospital.

Wilbur R. Davis, Pioneer Real Estate Man, Dies

Wilbur R. Davis, one of Chicago's best known real estate men and pioneer subdivider, whose interests were actively associated with the World's Fair in 1893, who died Friday, will be buried from his home, 5519 Cornell avenue at 2:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon.

WILBUR R. DAVIS.

A former member of the Chicago Real Estate board, Mr. Davis was superintendent of St James Methodist Sunday school at the time it was the largest school of its kind in the world. He is survived by his widow and two sons.

Panic Caused When Auto Crashes Through Market

The vegetable market in the vicinity of Randolph and Halsted streets received a shock yesterday when a large automobile careened through the congested district, overturning several loaded wagons and creating a near panic among scores of merchants.

Police arrested Robert W. Jones, 5512 West Fulton street, the driver, and Oscar Shields of River Forest, a passenger. Both, according to the police, were under the influence of liquor, and Jones will probably be booked charged with driving an auto while intoxicated.

VANDERBILT SUES FOR $10,575,010; CHARGES FRAUD

Brings Action Involving Mexican Oil Deal.

New York, May 17.—Two suits for a total of $10,575,010 were filed today against Henry L. Doherty, as surviving member of the firm of Henry L. Doherty & Co., by William K. Vanderbilt, Benjamin F. Yoakum, and a group of British oil men as plaintiffs.

Both suits involve oil properties in the Tampico field and also refineries and terminals near New Orleans.

The actions grew out of the organization in 1916 of the Empire Transportation and Oil corporation, which subsequently passed into federal receivership, with a subsidiary of the Doherty firm later purchasing the assets at a receiver's sale in Virginia. Allegations of fraud, misrepresentation, and failure properly to manage and develop the properties are made against the Doherty company in both complaints.

One of the suits is for $8,381,718, the principal plaintiffs being a British group comprising the owners of the Continental Transportation and Oil corporation, a Delaware concern, which owned a majority of the stock of the Gulf Coast corporation, the Southern Fuel and Refining company, and the National Petroleum corporation. The suit by Mr. Vanderbilt and Mr. Yoakum is for $2,193,292. These two plaintiffs, together with Jesse C. McDowell of Pittsburgh, owned equal shares in the Lagunita Oil company.

The Doherty firm, it is alleged, manipulated a consolidation of the properties of the two interests to permit the Doherty firm to obtain possession of the assets of the consolidated company at a very low figure, whereas they were worth approximately $25,000,000.

TWO CONVICTS ESCAPE PRISON AT JOLIET, ILL.

Two convicts, one serving a life term for murder, escaped from the new penitentiary at Joliet yesterday. Harry King, who killed a policeman in Peoria in 1916, and Frank Edwards, serving a term of from one to twenty years for robbery and assault, managed to steal a ladder and with the aid of a rope, escaped over the north wall shortly after midnight, Friday.

The men, who were trusties, were repairing the floor of the new dining room and both disappeared from the carpenter shop. They were not missed for several hours and local authorities were not notified of their escape until yesterday morning.

Bishop of New Faith Here from the Ukraine

The Most Rev. Archbishop John Feodorovitch, newly appointed head of the Ukrainian Orthodox Autocephalous church in America, is in Chicago visiting the church of his faith, at Erie and Robey streets. The new religious movement was started at Kiev, in the Ukraine, in March, 1921, in spite of the Russian Episcopate. The aim of the new revival is to christianize, not dogmatize, he declared, to spread ideals of American freedom and fair play, and to get in closer touch with other denominations.

Hursen Funeral-Cost Is a Revelation

Hursen long ago set a standard scale of prices for funerals. These prices have been from one-third to one-half the charges usually exacted elsewhere.

But nobody else in the business of funeral direction ever followed Hursen's price standard. He has always stood alone! Together with this price standard Hursen also established a new standard of super-elegance in materials, in automobile equipment, and in a highly organized perfection of service.

Nobody else has ever followed these standards of Hursen elegance and Hursen service. In these features, too, he has always stood alone!

In the beginning, there were some who said "if couldn't be done." There were a few who wished him disaster. He hung on to a single idea, alone!

Today, years after "Hursen's" has become the largest undertaking establishment in America—the unswerving champion of what is right in price, creator of a new elegance and of a particular service, unsurpassed. At the top, always ready for sweet service for you and yours, he stands—alone!

(A Business Editorial)

THOROUGHNESS.

Thoroughness means accuracy. It is one of the chief factors in success, be it an employee or an aggregation of employees known as a business.

Each executive and each employee before saying he is "through on the job for the day" should take stock of his work and assure himself that he has been "thorough on the job" during the day.

Else in this day of competition, when errors frequently create a totally unfavorable impression, the employee or the business may find that "through on the job" has taken a different meaning from that originally intended.

NEW IDEAS SEEN TO SOON STRAND FORD ON SHOALS

Expert Says Fertilizer Process Is Crude.

BY DONALD EWING.

Washington, D. C., May 17.—[Special.]—Henry Ford's alluring promises of cheap fertilizer for farmers if the government will give him Muscle Shoals got another rap in the senate agricultural committee today.

Chemical experts testified that, where Ford talks of cheap fertilizer for 100 years, within a few years other processes will develop so much that Ford's plan would not only be the height of extravagance, but impossible from a competitive standpoint.

Not fertilizer, but millions of elcctric horsepower, running all the mechanical equipment on the farm, lowering costs through increased industry, supplying light and heat, running railroads as well as interurban lines—that is what Muscle Shoals hold for the future, the testimony ran.

Expert on the Stand.

Dr. Louis C. Jones, consulting engineer and industrial chemist of New York, was the chief witness. Until recently he headed a corporation that operated the largest synthetic ammonia plant ever constructed outside of Germany. He said:

"Regarding the production of fixed nitrogen fifty years hence at Muscle Shoals, I will say that I think none will be made there. Power will be so much in demand for all sorts of purposes in the cities and on the farms that it will be economically wrong to use it for fertilizer production.

"Then I am sure you will ask me whence will come the plant food for the necessary needs of agriculture, and I will say fixed nitrogen production will fall back on fuel for making hydrogen, perhaps shale oil, and if fuel or power is still required in this industry toward the termination of this proposed lease the great fertilizer needs of the world will be supplied from hydro-electric power in localities remote from industrial and agricultural centers—Alaska, Norway, Labrador, Iceland and Greenland, where raw materials, air, water and power, are abundantly available and whence transportation by water will be inexpensive.

Vision of Bacteria Process.

"Neither is it beyond the bounds of reason to think the hot, dry regions of the earth, perhaps seeded with a highly developed type of bacteria, can be made to reproduce 'Chile nitrate' deposits.

"The desolate regions of the earth, both hot and cold, may then become really useful regions. As a mater of fact, Dr. Curtis has compiled figures which indicate that bacteria on the earth's surface now produce annually more fixed nitrogen than is produced or consumed for all purposes industrially and for agriculture."

Other contentions in Dr. Jones' testimony were:

That it has never been considered a government function to produce on government land large quantities of food products, and for that reason, if for no other, it would not be justifiable for the United States to enter into the manufacture of fertilizer in competition with private industry.

An Unseasoned Industry.

That the nitrogen fixation industry is a new and unseasoned one, and that due to the rapid progress being made in this art, it would be unwise to attempt to fix definite methods of procedure at Muscle Shoals for fifty years, or even twenty-five years hence.

That in his judgment the production of phosphazote at nitrate plant No. 2 will not result in economy, either in the cost of fertilizer or its distribution.

SWEAR IN 500 BOYS AS POLICE GUARDS

Maj. John A. Bauder, veteran drillmaster of the Chicago police, yesterday swore in 500 schoolboys as junior cops, intrusted with the task of guarding the children of the city, particularly of the schools, from speeding motorists. From left to right the photograph, snapped in Grant park, shows J. F. Cornelius, Capt. H. A. White, Maj. A. H. Moore, and Maj. Bauder, the latter about to pin a shiny star to the coat of one of the lads.

INDEPENDENCE DAY CELEBRATED BY NORWEGIANS

Thousands of Chicagoans of Norwegian birth or descent joined in the celebration of Norway's national independence yesterday. The services, which continued throughout the day, reached the peak at noon in Humboldt park with an impressive ceremony before the Lief Erickson statue.

Alfred O. Erickson, president of the Norwegian National league, spoke before the statue and told his audience that the assemblage exemplified loyalty of the races of the north to their adopted home as well as to the motherland.

A field meet in Brand park in the afternoon and further outdoor services in the evening concluded the day's activities. Thirty-six members of the Norwegian Singers' league left last night for Washington, en route for a three months' tour of their motherland.

CHURCHES OPEN BOYS' WEEK WITH SPECIAL SERVICE

Many Events to Mark Observance Here.

Today is the day of the boy in Chicago churches.

One time a Boy stood in the temple and talked of God with His elders and the lessons the Boy taught that day have not been forgotten.

Boys' week will start this morning with services in almost every Chicago church given to the interest of boys. In most churches boys will take part in the services.

Masons Take Part.

The boys of the west side will be the honor guests at a meeting at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon at the New First Congregational church, Washington and Ashland boulevards. A parade under the banners of the Builders, an organization embracing Masons of the entire west side, will start from the West Chicago Masonic temple, 12 South Oakley boulevard, at 2:30 o'clock, and will march to the church. It will be escorted by the Columbia commandery and its military band, which will serenade at the Crippled Children's Home, Park avenue and Paulina street, after the services.

Arthur M. Millard, grand master of the Builders, will give the address of the afternoon. There will also be an address by the Rev. Gilbert Wilson, pastor of the First Congregational church.

Boys' week, which was at first wholly in the hands of the Rotary club in Chicago, this year has been taken over by a large group of civic organizations. The purpose is not only to call attention of forgetful adults to the cause of the boy but to make the boy think more about himself.

Boy's Time of Value.

What a boy wants to do with his spare time and what he does with his leisure hours is of grave importance to the growth of the man, fathers have discovered, and so fathers of Chicago this week give their first interest to the sons of the city.

The Boys' week federation of Chicago aims to center the mind and heart of the city on its boyhood, that the youth may understand, may be given opportunity to develop into a sterling citizenry.

Tomorrow is Boys' day in the public schools. Programs by the boys have been arranged in many schools. The week is to end with the biggest boys' parade ever held here when 5,000 boys are expected to participate.

RAILROADS PICK COMMITTEE ON STATION PROJECT

Selection of the railroads' engineering committee which will prepare plans for station consolidation, part of the project which includes straightening of the river between Polk and 16th streets, was announced yesterday by James B. Gorman, president of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railroad.

G. A. Harwood, vice president of the New York Central lines was named as permanent chairman of the group, C. P. Richardson of the Rock Island lines was chosen as secretary of the committee, which includes E. H. Lee, vice president and chief engineer of the Chicago & Western Indiana railroad, L. G. Fritsch, vice president of the Rock Island lines; L. G. Curtis, of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, and G. W. Harris of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad.

The committee will undertake a study of several schemes of track relocation which will replace the present maze if the railroads ultimately agree upon a union terminal plan.

SAFE BLOWN FOR BIG GEM HAUL.

Newark, N. J., May 17.—Unset diamonds and finished jewelry valued at $20,000 were stolen by thieves who today forced an entrance to the Stern Jewelry Manufacturing company and blew open one of three safes, the company reported to police.

5,000 MEN PLAN TO SHOW WORK OF BIBLE CLASS

Five thousand men are expected to unite June 1 in a demonstration of men's Bible class work as a feature of the northern Baptist convention, which will be held in Milwaukee, May 28 to June 3. Special delegations are expected from Omaha, Des Moines, Indianapolis, Minneapolis, and St. Paul. Chicago may send 1,000 laymen.

The leaders of the business men's class of Kansas City, the largest in the world, with an enrollment of 4,000, will conduct the rally.

A banquet, which will be addressed by G. Sherwood Eddy and James Colgate, will be held the night before the rally. The laymen's committee of Chicago, of which Orlo O. Matgaue is chairman, will travel to Milwaukee by a special train on Sunday, June 1.

REPORT SUCCESS OF SERUM FOR SCARLET FEVER

Baltimore, Md., May 17.—[By United Press.]—Serum for treatment of scarlet fever, which gives promise, it is said, of revolutionizing tratment for this disease, has been used with satisfactory results in about eighteen cases at Sydenham hospital, and further trials are in progress.

The serum, which is injected into the patient, is being produced and perfected by Dr. Alphonse Raymond Dochez, formerly of Johns Hopkins hospital, where he began experiments with the serum in 1917. Successful results of the serum have been reported by hospitals in New York, New Haven, and Peking, China, it was said.

The new serum is produced through immunization of horses, it is said.

Excellent Business Sites Can Now Be Purchased on Attractive Terms

LOCATED on the Dempster Street in the immediate vicinity of the new "L" terminal, only 11 miles—30 minutes from the loop—in the fastest growing district of the city. Preferred business sites may now be had at unusually attractive prices and terms to meet your convenience.

The extension of the elevated to Niles Center has already been started. "L" service is definitely promised in 1925. Property values are destined to multiply hundreds of times—just as they have at Wilson Avenue in the last sixteen years—as they have at Howard Avenue and Kimball Avenue where recent terminals have been built.

Britton I. Budd, president of the North Shore Line, has predicted that within 10 years Niles Center will be a city of 200,000 people. Property values are bound to increase and these sites will make fortunes for those who look ahead a few short years and buy now while the property is still practically undeveloped.

The locations that we offer here are destined to become "high spots" in the heart of the business district of Niles Center.

Choice locations are rapidly being taken up. Phone or mail the coupon below for complete particulars about these preferred locations—it will not obligate you in the least. Big money will be made here!

CARDINAL HOLDS WELCOME MASS FOR RELIGIOUS

Cathedral Is Scene of Gorgeous Pageantry.

For the third time since the homecoming of Cardinal Mundelein, a week ago, Holy Name cathedral was the scene of a religious pageant of splendor yesterday. It was the new cardinal's pontifical mass of welcome to the religious of the city.

There was an atmosphere of the middle ages, of asceticism, about the solemn mass which the two former services lacked.

The nave of the cathedral was filled with the cloistered ones who, in their voluntary retirement from the world, care for the children of their church, her poor, her aged, and her infirm.

In Gorgeous Processions.

Gentle faced nuns, looking out from the frame of their black and white hoods; brothers of the religious orders, seldom seen outside the walls of the monastic homes, were in the processions before and after the mass.

The gorgeous robes of the clergy, the scarlet vestments of the cardinal on his throne within the sanctuary, the great tapers twinkling on the altar, found their splendor strangely reflected back from the dark, black mirror of the pews, where the sisters and the brothers knelt in prayer.

Among the nuns were the Dominican Sisters, who conduct Rosary college for women in Oak Park; the Sisters of Mercy; the Sisters of Providence; Sisters of Notre Dame; of St. Mary of Nazareth; of the Holy Child, and of the Resurrection.

And among the monastic delegations were the Alexian Brothers, who dedicate themselves to the care of the sick; the Christian Brothers, whose duty is teaching; the Brothers of the Resurrectionist Congregation; Jesuits, Vincentians, Franciscans, Benedictines, Augustinans, Dominicans, Brothers of the Divine Word, of the Precious Blood, Passionate, and others.

Escorting Cardinal Mundelein paced his two guards of honor, Edward Hines, K. C. S. G., and D. F. Kelly, K. S. G., the master of ceremonies, deacons of honor, and assistant priest.

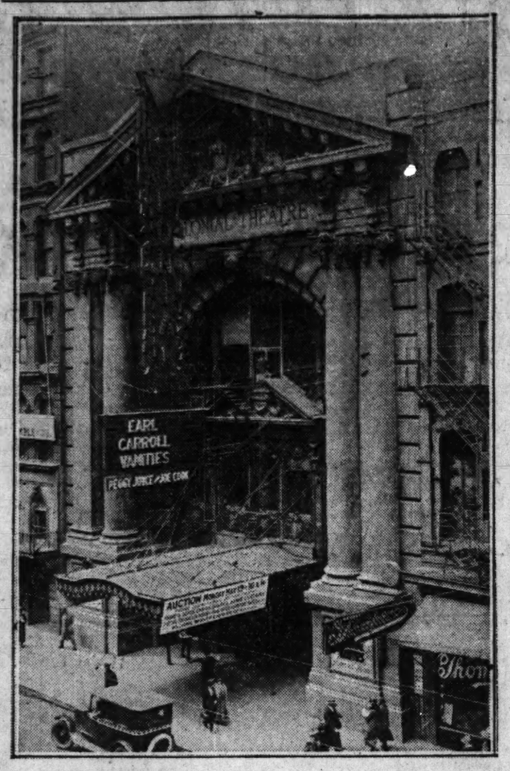
Addresses the Sisterhoods.

It was to the sisters that Cardinal Mundelein chiefly addressed himself in a short talk, following the mass, which transmitted the message Pope Pius XI. had commissioned him to bring home.

He spoke of their contribution to the church, and continued in part:

"To the holy father I spoke of their work, their numbers, their zeal and activity, their self-sacrificing labors for everything that concerns holy mother, the church," he said. "To the head of the sacred congregation of religious, who has care of them, I said that our women religious were a constant source of consolation to me; that without them our progress would be halted and our work hampered."

RIALTO LOSES A LANDMARK



The Colonial theater, which closed its doors for the last time last night on a departing crowd of theatergoers. The furnishings will be sold tomorrow and on May 26 wreckers will begin the work of demolishing it to make way for the new United Masonic temple. It was the scene of the disastrous fire of 1903, when it was named the Iroquois.

FINAL CURTAIN RUNG DOWN ON COLONIAL STAGE

The Colonial theater, Chicago's second playhouse in point of seating capacity, passed into history last night. With the ringing down of the final curtain on last night's performance, the famous old showhouse in which 575 persons lost their lives in the Iroquois fire disaster of 1903, closed its doors to the theatergoing public forever.

They will be swung open again for a few hours tomorrow while the properties, seats, motor equipment, and other fixtures will be sold at public auction. Then the familiar old structure on the rialto will be torn down to make way for the erection of a new nineteen story United Masonic temple. Work of tearing down the building will be started on May 26.

While the Colonial theater was only about twenty years old—a youthful age as theaters go—it was looked upon as one of the oldest in Chicago's amusement world. As the Iroquois theater, then the last word in playhouse construction, its doors were first opened to the public on Nov. 23, 1902. It was a little over a month later—on Dec. 30, 1903—during a matinée performance that fire started on the stage and bellowed out under the proscenium, taking its terrible toll of men, women, and children. Most of them were trampled to death in the rush for exits.

The theater was rebuilt and reopened as the Colonial. Since then it has been known as the home of musical comedy, and in later years of the Ziegfeld Follies and the Music Box review. Many memorable musical plays made record runs there. Among them were "The Merry Widow" and "The Pink Lady."

Neither Harry J. Powers, owner of the playhouse, nor his son, Harry Jr., was present at last night's performance. Rollo Timponi, manager, who has followed the fortunes of the Powers family since he graduated as an usher twenty years ago.

CITY OPENS BIDS MAY 26 FOR 160 REFUSE TRAILERS

Motorization of the city's street cleaning department, delayed for years by diversion of appropriations for the purpose to other activities, advanced a step yesterday when Commissioner of Public Works A. A. Sprague announced that manufacturers' bids for contracts to supply the trailer equipment will be opened on May 26.

Under plans prepared by Superintendent of Streets Thomas Byrne, 160 of the new trailers, to cost approximately $250,000, are to be placed in the ash and refuse collection service in north and northwest side wards before Aug. 1. The plans contemplate city-wide motorization in two phases and another $500,000 will be required to completely equip the districts north of Madison street.

More Money Needed.

Appropriation of this amount probably will be asked by the street cleaning department in 1925, while at least $1,000,000 to extend the system to include the south and west sides will be sought in 1926.

Superintendent Byrne points out that each three car train of trailers will haul between 18 and 21 cubic yards of refuse and will make at least four or five trips to the dumps daily. Trucks or tractors will be rented by the city for the present, he says.

What Trailers Will Save.

The new trains will haul an average of 90 cubic yards a day at a total cost of $74, Mr. Byrne estimates, in contrast to the 5 cubic yards hauled under the prevailing system at a cost of $10.50. To haul 90 cubic yards of ashes or refuse by team and wagon, it now costs the city approximately $189.

Teams will be used in loading the trailers and hauling them to stations where the dump trains will be made up. These teams will cost the city $31.50 a day. Truck or tractor rent is expected to average $32.50 a day. Three extra laborers at $5 a day each and a trainman at $5 a day brings the total cost of operating the trailer train to $74.

PERSHING TELLS PLAN OF TESTS OF MOBILIZATION

"Defense Practice" to Be Held Sept. 12.

Washington, D. C., May 17.—Harking back to the days when he "sat on the lid" in France while the United States extemporized an army to fight in the great war, Gen. Pershing today asked the nation to support the war department's "defense test" to be held Sept. 12.

"Nobody is more deeply interested in this than I, he said in a signed statement, "because nobody saw the picture under the stress of war as I saw it."

The defense test project was designed, Gen. Pershing said, to indicate to the nation just what would be required in a war mobilization under plans devised since the war to obviate some of the delays and confusion of 1917-'18.

Plans Not Secret.

"Our plans are not secret, as the methods of organization and the success of the system require the coöperation of communities and the voluntary action of individuals," he said.

"In the world war, after enormous expenditures and serious loss of time, we eventually concentrated masses of untrained individuals in a few centers, where they were segregated and trained with the utmost difficulty.

"Profiting by these experiences, a policy exists today which contemplates skeleton units partially trained in advance, which can be concentrated locally when necessary."

Will Test Reserves.

For the regulars and National Guard, as first line troops, the statement continued, actual war preparation would mean recruiting to war strength and completion of training and equipment. The ability and foresight of officers to handle these questions will be observed during the proposed tests, but the bulk of a war army would come from the reserves.

"We hope to impress on the individual his particular function if war comes,' Gen. Pershing said. "We have never before undertaken such a step in instruction."

COTTAGE GIVEN Y. W. C. A. FOR A SUMMER CAMP

The gift of a cottage at Camp Millhurst, on the Fox river, near Plano, Ill., to the Chicago Central Young Women's Christian association by the children of the late Mrs. James L. Houghteling, as a memorial to their mother, was announced late yesterday by Mrs. N. W. Campbell, president of the association.

The gift is made by Mrs. Arthur Tuttle, Miss Leila H. Houghteling, Miss Harriott Houghteling, and James L. Houghteling Jr. The cottage will accommodate twelve girls, and will be added to the camp colony at Camp Millhurst, where the Y. W. C. A. now maintains a summer camp for girls.

Reports Another Gift.

Mrs. Campbell announced at the campaign luncheon, held yesterday at the central Y. W. C. A. headquarters, 59 East Monroe street, that Mrs. Frank K. Hoover has given as her gift to the $183,000 campaign fund, new furniture for the hall she built at Forest Beach camp, New Buffalo, Mich. Forest Beach is maintained as a camp for business girls, and accommodates 150 girls a week.

In addition to refurnishing the hall she donated a few years ago, Mrs. Hoover will build sleeping porches to the camp cottages, and will give all new furniture for the camp dining hall.

Need $100,000 More.

Last night the campaigning teams reported $86,000 in subscriptions, leaving $100,000 to be raised.

The men's committee, under the chairmanship of John Stuart, president of the Quaker Oats company—a committee organized only this week—to assist the women in the campaign, will report on Monday.

The Chicago Y. W. C. A. is 72 per cent self supporting. The $183,000 needed next year is to finance only 28 per cent of the association's work—that of the nonproductive departments.

DIAGNOSIS TO BE FEATURE WHEN DOCTORS MEET

A feature of the annual convention of the American Medical association to be held in Chicago from June 9 to 13 will be a diagnostic clinic in which specialists will demonstrate on patients the newest scnetific methods of diagnosing and curing diseases, it was announced yesterday.

Diabetes, infant malnutrition, skin diseases, diseases of the eye, ear, nose, and throat, gland problems, the Dick test for scarlet fever susceptibility will be among the subjects discussed by experts. It will be the first public demonstration of the Dick test, which was recently discovered by Drs. G. H. and Gladys Dick of the McCormick Institute for Infectious Diseases of Chicago, of which Dr. Ludvig Hektoen is director.

HEADS CHICAGO PRINCIPALS CLUB.

George A. Beers, principal of the Clark school, was elected president of the Chicago Principals club at their annual election yesterday. He succeeds Miss Rose A. Festa, the only woman who ever held the presidency of the organization.

YOUTHS CALL ON AGED MAN; ROB AND SLUG HIM

On the pretence that they desired to rent a room, two well dressed youths gained admittance into the home of Louis Diener, 62 years old, 1345 Jackson boulevard, yesterday. As Diener was leading the way up a steep, dark starway, one of the young men struck him with the butt of a revolver while the other rifled his pockets of $40. They then fled. Diener reported the robbery to Des Plaines street police. He said the youths drove to the place in a Ford car, but that he failed to note the license number.

CHINA IGNORES YEAR'S ATTACKS ON FOREIGNERS

Home Governments Idle, Outrages Grow.

BY J. B. POWELL.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

SHANGHAI, China, May 17.—Just one year ago—May 5, 1923—a band of bandits numbering from 1,500 to 2,000 wrecked China's crack "Blue express" train, running between Shanghai and Peking, and carried the thirty-one foreign passengers into the mountains of Shantung, where they were held under revolting circumstances for periods ranging up to thirty-eight days. One foreign passenger, a British subject, was killed and several others suffered injuries from the experience which probably will remain with them through life.

The foreigners who were involved in the Lincheng outrage, as the Shantung bandit affair is now called in diplomatic circles, numbered by nationalities as follows: Americans, 16; Danes, 1; French, 3; Germans, 1; British 6; Italians, 2, and Mexicans, 2.

Demands Ignored by China.

After the prisoners had been released from the bandit lair on Mount Pao-zu-ku, the American and other foreign governments having ministers in Peking made certain demands upon the Chinese government for indemnities covering property losses, payment of medical bills, and reimbursement for time lost from business and other affairs due to the negligence of the Chinese government in not providing protection. The foreign governments also demanded that the Chinese government establish a reliable police protective system for the railroads.

Not one of these demands has been met by the Chinese government, although a year has now passed since the perpetration of the Lincheng outrage.

The disastrous effects of the failure of America and the other foreign governments to insist upon the fulfillment of their demands being carried out by the Chinese government is shown in the attached list of military and bandit outrages in the year just past, since the Lincheng outrage:

FRENCH AIRMEN STUNTS FAIL TO THRILL PRINCE

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS, May 17.—Ras Taffari, prince regent of Abyssinia, clad in flowing purple robes and an old brown fedora hat, today was taken on an official inspection visit to Lebourget airdrome, where he witnessed the maneuvers of crack French military air squadrons. Although the Abyssinian prince never before had seen an airplane, even the wildest acrobatics of the skillful aviators failed to elicit a single word of praise from him.

"Is not that wonderful, your majesty?" asked French Minister Lagarde, who acted as official escort for the dusky monarch.

"Tiny, harmless birds can do the same thing," replied the prince, laconically.

Pyorrhea— don't fear it

Modern science now tells us how to combat it—this remarkable new way that acts without medication

MODERN science has discovered a new combatant that instantly curbs coming pyorrhea and overcomes the cause of most tooth troubles—a way that does away with medication, with old methods.

This offers you a test without risk or obligation. A test that will prove a revelation.

In one week your teeth will be ten shades lighter. Your gums will be firmer, healthier than in years.

Virtually every leading dental authority throughout the civilized world endorses this new method. In a few years, many men of science say, it should mark an end of most of the common tooth troubles of today. Every day, on dental advice, over 20,000 people are adopting it.

Remarkable, new scientific facts—what causes bad and ugly teeth

Science now tells us pyorrhea, decay, tooth troubles start in crevices between the teeth.

Food banks in those crevices. Germ life starts. Bacteria by the millions form, then soften the protective dentine—the natural protection which, once lost, can never be regained.

Medication won't eliminate these germs. You must get the decaying food out. Must get it all out at least twice each day. Do this and you combat the seat of pyorrhea—remove the cause. That is all you need do. Don't fear pyorrhea. This new way takes 90% of the danger away.

Where brushing fails

Ordinary brushing won't remove the food. It will clean only the outside surfaces. A recent test showed that of 100 people who brushed their teeth with ordinary brushes three minutes, 76 did not even disturb inter-crevice accumulations.

That's why there are so many bad teeth today. Any dentist will tell you so. There are 102 hidden crevices between your teeth which old methods cannot reach.

Now a new way

Now in a new type of brush—fully patented—scientific prevention has been found.

It is called the Dr. West's Tooth Brush. It does what no other discovered method has yet attained—lifts food accumulations from between the teeth; reaches where no other type of cleansing can possibly reach.

In thousands of tests, tooth disorders, yellow teeth, teeth with frequent cavity indications were given new strength and resistive power. New beauty and whiteness beyond compare came quickly.

Use any good dentifrice in this treatment. Consult your dentist every four months. That covers all—nothing else need be done.

Make the test

Go today to any drug or department store. Ask for a Dr. West's Tooth Brush. Use it for one week. Note your gums, mark the whiteness of your teeth—the remarkable difference in "polish," the new gleam and life. Note, too, the absence of bad breath, for decaying food causes this offense.

20,000 people every day
are adopting this new method
on the advice of physicians and dentists

Old methods of treating tooth disorders have been supplanted. Yellow teeth can be whitened—made ten shades lighter in a few days, and kept that way.

Pyorrhea is caught at its source and prevented. No one need court that scourge in this day of modern scientific attainment.

Bad breath stops because the cause is removed.

Authorities say that under this new method of cleaning out germ-laden, inter-crevice accumulations, the ordinary tooth troubles of the present time should virtually disappear from the nation in a few years. No growing child should be denied the benefits it brings, they say.

These remarkable results are accomplished with a new-type brush, a patented design.

FRANCO-TURKISH BREAK ON SYRIA REPORTED NEAR

Moslems Mass Army and Purchase Planes.

BY JOHN CLAYTON.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

VIENNA, Austria, May 17.—Dispatches received today from Constantinople indicate that the relations between France and Turkey are near an open break over the Syrian question. Within the next few days the Angora government will forward to Quai d'Orsay a demand that France fulfill in detail the Angora accord arranged by Franklin Bouillon, with the immediate granting of autonomy to the ports of Antioch and Alexandretta, with equal trading rights for the Turks. Strong protests against attacks on the southern frontier of Turkey will be made.

Since differences arose between France and Turkey over the Ottoman debt the Turkish policy has been constantly turning toward England. For several months the French have been engaged with Turkish troops in minor combats along the frontier of Syria. The Turks charge the French with arming and supporting local bands there. Recently the skirmishes have been more violent, and the Turks have sent an entire army corps into Silkia.

Support Syrian Rebels.

The Turks, on their part, have been liberally supporting agencies at work in Syria to break away from French rule and reunite with Turkey. This movement is especially strong in Aleppo, where the French have permitted a political club to exist which openly demands a reunion with Turkey.

Grave importance is attached to the forthcoming Turkish note, find it may mean an official break of the Kemal government with France. Mustapha Kemal Pasha's troops are in a position to make serious difficulties for the French in Syria.

Turks Buy Planes.

A short time ago German military men visited Turkey to install an aviation base and school near Adelia. A contract was closed with the Halberstadt company last January to install a factory base with a capacity of 300 planes annually. Additional planes have been purchased from many Germans and Italian firms for combat, bombing and reconnaissance.

The Turkish troops concentrated within striking distance of the Syrian frontier greatly outnumber the French.

FIVE HURT IN STREET CRASH.

Five persons, three men and two women, were slightly injured early yesterday in a collision between two surface cars at Adams and Halsted streets. John Upetis, 3231 West Harrison street, who received a broken leg was the most seriously injured, officials announced.

NEW WAR GERMS

France and Turkey are reported near a break over conditions in Syria. There have been clashes between Turkish and French troops along the southern border of Turkey, and now the Turks demand that France carry out the Angora accord. This would open the ports of Antioch and Alexandretta to the Turks under an autonomous government.

MINERS' CHIEF REFUSES DARE TO FIGHT IT OUT

BY THOMAS WREN.

Peoria, Ill., May 17.—[Special.]—"Toss away your gavel and let's fight it out," shouted John Hindmarsh of Riverton to Frank Farrington, head of the Illinois Mine Workers, today as the union officials become engaged in a controversy over the seating of delegates in the convention of state coal miners.

The insurgent faction led by Delegate Hindmarsh question the legality of several delegates' credentitals and asserted there were delegates seated in the convention who were not authorized by their local unions. Farrington said the convention would gladly unseat any delegate illegally sent to the miners biennial meeting but inferred the complaints were being made to hamper the progress of the convention. The insurgent faction shouted that the seating of the delegates in dispute was part of the Farrington program to pack the convention with his friends.

Refuses to Fight.

When the peak of the controversy had been reached Delegate Hindmarsh issued the fistic challenge to Farrington. The latter said he had come to the convention to adjust the affairs of the union and not to fight. Hindmarsh is a powerful looking man with a square set jaw and a determined look on his face.

During the dispute the convention was in a state of confusion. Both factions added to the turmoil which continued until Farrington gaveled the meeting into order.

John Walker, president of the Illinois Federation of Labor and one of Farrington's co-workers in behalf of Gov. Small's campaign for reelection, made a blustery speech this morning, telling why he changed from the Socialist to the Farmer-Labor party and then suddenly deserted the latter and accepted a seat on the Small band wagon.

After a twenty year experiment with third party political activities he said he learned the wage earners and farmers weren't ready for direct political action. Walker estimated it would take at least fifty years before any real third party movement can be organized.

Cites Janitors' Pardons.

Honest Jack cited the pardoning of the ten officials of the Chicago Flat Janitors' union as a reason why the workers should support Small in the fall election.

He held the officials of the Janitors' union up as leaders, who bettered the conditions of the caretakers of Chicago apartment buildings, and related how the wages of janitors in that city had been raised from $50 a month to on an average of $50 a week.

Before becoming head of the State Federation of Labor Walker was a leader in the Illinois miners. At the recent primaries he was supposed to "swing the vote of organized labor in the state to Small," and his stronghold was said to be among the miners, of whom there are 90,000 in the state. However, when he concluded his speech today there was scarcely any applause from the 562 delegates.

Charges that some Illinois coal operators are beginning to draw the line on employing men over the age of 54 years were contained in a resolution introduced by delegates from Gillespie. This communication states that the operators are basing their opposition on the contention that men over that age are a great liability under the state compensation law. If the practice were continued, the miners point out, it would drive out men who have given the best parts of their lives to the mining industry.

Charges Stokes' Witness Was Offered $1,000 Bribe

As an aftermath of the famous W. E. D. Stokes divorce case, Assistant State's Attorney William W. Smith announced yesterday that an effort had been made to bribe May W. Hyde, colored, 3704 Grand boulevard, said by the state to be an important witness in the charge of conspiracy to defame the character of Stokes' wife, for which the aged millionaire and three others are under indictment. Prosecutor Smith said a man had offered Mrs. Hyde "$1,000 to forget certain parts of her testimony." The trial is scheduled for Wednesday.

A Finer Car in More Ways than One

The advantages of this Nash Six Touring model are many and decisively evident.

Just take its wheelbase. In this respect it exceeds others of like price by from 2 to 9 inches.

The top, too, is superior. There are 5 sturdy bows instead of the conventional 4 you find.

And Nash gives the body extra care in finishing. 16 coats of paint are applied. That takes a full 17 days. You know this means much in extending the "new" look of your car long past the usual point.

In the broad, deep-cushioned front seat there are 36 springs to accentuate your restfulness. And 40 in the big rear seat.

Added value, better design, stronger construction, is plainly seen in every part of the car.

Just inspect this model once—thoroughly. You'll soon see it's the best buy by far in its field.

A demonstration will clinch that fact conclusively. Drop in today. Or phone us a time convenient for a ride for you and your family.

BOOTLEGGING IN IMMIGRANTS NEW TRADE IN CUBA

Smuggle Foreigners Into the United States.

BY LARRY RUE.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

HAVANA, Cuba, May 17.—While smugglers of immigrants into America are still advertising on a smaller scale than the United States line, they are as open in the conduct of their business as Michigan boulevard bootleggers.

In the same way income tax returns fail to reveal the extent of the bootlegging profits in America, there are no available statistics of the smuggling of Chinese, Armenians, Portuguese, and Greeks into the States. However, if one adopts the same standards regarding the evidence as the senate investigating committee, the conviction is easily reached that "hordes are landing in the United States daily."

A tip on horse races is regarded here as considerably more reliable than Cuban government statistics so the government report that immigration into Cuba has increased from 25,000 in 1921 to 75,000 in 1923 is valuable only in showing the tendency.

Chinese Increase Rapidly.

In 1920 the official number of Chinese in Cuba was 10,000. President Zayas in his April message to congress stated that three Chinamen entered Cuba in 1922 and four in 1923, making a total of seven for the two years. The figures caused loud guffaws from the press which intimates that Señor Zayas was talking for the benefit of California.

Estimates as to the number of Chinese in Cuba vary from 30,000 to 250,000. The latter guess undoubtedly is an exaggeration. Since April alone a check-up of the Chinese arriving in Cuba as "merchants and students" shows that the number exceeds 1,300.

The Spanish colony of 280,000, which is feeling Chinese competition in shops and restaurants, is considerably agitated and its newspapers are campaigning for exclusion. The Spaniards protest that if the men arriving are merchants and students, Senator Ledge is the leader of the farm bloc. They charge that the Chinese spent millions to bribe officials in entering the country. Owing to pressure from this and other sources, probably in the United States, Senor Zayas has issued orders to the Cuban consuls to refuse any more visas to the Chinese, but every ship from the Panama brings batches of from six to forty.

Others Smuggled In, Too.

Cuban officials maintain that the United States exclusion law was passed after the treaty between Cuba and the United States, hence, it does not apply to Cuba.

Other immigrants entering, as has been shown officially, reach 75,000. The American consul here daily refuses about 200 European visas, most of whom have been rejected in Europe because the quotas were filled. Obviously they receive the impression from the steamship companies that Cuba is another Ellis Island. Many have remained here a year waiting for new quotas.

Consular statistics show that tens of thousands of Europeans try to enter America via Cuba. More than half are rejected. What happens to these? Any one who has found a bootlegger in the States knows the ropes in finding an immigrant smuggler in Cuba.

Walking the docks at randon THE TRIBUNE correspondent picked out a likely looking dock worker and asked if he knew any boats leaving that might be interested in taking over a small cargo of cattle. He said he knew one boat that took nine Greeks over recently, but at the prcsent time there was no harbor.

Agents Represent Crews.

"All sugar boats will take is two or three," he said, "but it is better to see one of the special agents up in town." He explained the agents were not employed by companies, but represented either crews or captains.

Besides this, little tugs may be induced to take special trips if there is sufficient business. Most of the immigrants smuggled are Italians and Greeks, but there are some Chinese. As the Chinese are easily identified among a crew, the risk in taking these is great and the price asked is from $800 to $1,000 per head.

GOOD REPUTATION OF HIS DOG, NOW DEAD, SAVES MASTER $5,000

Dixon, Ill., May 17.—[Special.]—The good reputation of Bowser, a dog now dead and who in life was owned by Charles Vogler of Ogle county, yesterday won a man a lawsuit in which he had been sued for $5,000.

It was charged by the plaintiff, Katherine Kane Clinton, that Bowser, by running out to bark at her car, got in the way of the wheels and caused a wreck in which he was killed and she and her sister were seriously injured on the Lincoln highway near Ashton last summer.

There were no witnesses to the accident, so all through the three days of trial the case hinged on the behavior of Bowser, and there were many witnesses to say that he was not the kind of dog that runs out and barks at people passing by.

FRENCHMEN SEE GIANT PLANES IN NEW WAR IN 1935

Paint Germany Hurling More Deadly Gas.

BY HENRY WALES.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS, May 17.—Europe faces the menace of a horrible aero and chemical war fought with giant bombing planes dropping the most terrible poison gases and explosives. This warning is published in a sensational novel by M. Camille Meillac, the noted French writer, and in articles by Capt. Rene Fonck, the leading French ace, and a member of the new chamber of deputies.

M. Meillac, in his novel entitled "1935," predicts another Franco-German war ten years hence, with the two powers making their attack with super-planes and hideously devastating gases.

"The future war is not being prepared in barracks but in laboratories working to launch new death forces," writes M. Meillac.

Capt. Fonck declares a mighty air force is being built by Germany under a widespread system of camouflages with the aid of Russia and colleagues in neutral countries are preparing to make a swift revengé blow, backed by tremendous chemical weapons.

Sees Part of Paris Destroyed.

M. Meillac's novel visualizes a German air attack by which great sections of Paris will be completely destroyed, and the Louvre and Notre Dame cathedral will be reduced to ruins. He says a fleet of super-airplanes armed with one ton bombs will make the raid. He also pictures mammoth cannon raining heavy fire, and new poison gases which will bring instant death over a wide area.

Capt. Fonck points out that aero-chemical forces could be mobilized with the greatest speed in factories which can easily and quickly be converted from a peaceful to a warlike manufacturing purpose. "Quick mobilization of the aviation chemical factories will send immediately into the sky the most terrible plague to which humanity was ever forced to submit."

The French ace says Germany is able to produce 600,000 tons of synthetic nitrogen annually. The vast factories between Essen and Geminschaft "can within a few days transform themselves from making dyes and coloring matters into manufacturers of gases and poisons."

Asks About Air Engineers.

"It would be interesting to investigate what Herr Dornier is doing in Switzerland and the Zepplin engineers in Spain towards the German air force," he continues.

ILLINOIS SOCIETY ASKS STATE TO ANNEX MOUNDS

"Save America's Pyramids," is the slogan expected to be adopted by the Illinois State Historical society at the twenty-fifth annual meeting of the body, to be held in Springfield May 22 and 23. Resolutions will be adopted and a move started to speed up the campaign for the acquisition by the state of the largest and most beautiful of the Cahokia mounds, near East St. Louis. State officials will be asked to negotiate for the purchase of at least 100 acres of the Cahokia mound territory.

McNARY-HAUGEN MEASURE UP IN HOUSE TUESDAY

Washington, D. C., May 17.—[Special.]—Consideration of the McNary-Haugen agricultural export corporation bill will be commenced in the house on Tuesday under a program perfected today by the rules committee. A special rule was approved providing for fifteen hours of general debate followed by consideration of amendments under the five minute rule.

The bill will be before the house on Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Wednesday being set aside for other business. Night sessions will be held while the McNary-Haugen bill is under consideration with a view to final action by Saturday.

There will be a deluge of oratory on agricultural condition and with spokesmen for farm organizations divided on the desirability of passing the measure. The more conservative agricultural organizations are solidly for the bill, but the radical group favors the Norris-Sinclair bill. The house vote will be close.

At the end of the coal using season how. will your coal have stood up under fire? Will you have the maximum amount of heat as well as staying power? Did it burn clean, leaving little ash? These are the outstanding features you must consider when buying coal. They are the main points that make for a lower fuel cost. Price alone at the time of purchase should not be the only consideration.

This company merchandises coal along these lines. You can depend on a square deal at all times.

The Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

AMUSEMENT IS UNDER NEW FIRE BY METHODISTS

Urge No Pastime Not in Lord's Name.

BY THE REV. W. B. NORTON.

Springfield, Mass., May 17.—[Special.]—The solution of the amusement question, which was made the subject of legislation by the Methodist general conference fifty-two years ago, and has been a battle ground ever since, will be presented to this general conference by the committee on the state of the church at an early session.

The subcommittee, of which the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, pastor of Madison Avenue church, New York, is chairman, has the report ready.

The report eliminates "dancing, playing at games of chance, attending theaters, horse races, circuses, dancing parties or patronizing dancing schools" from the penal code, and substitutes "taking such diversions as cannot be said in the name of the Lord Jesus."

New Rules for Discipline.

It recommends also that the following be inserted in the book of discipline as indicating the attitude of the church, while leaving application of the law to the judgment of the minister and the conscience of the member. The specific advice is is follows:

"Improper amusements and excessive indulgence in innocent amusements are serious barriers at the beginning of the religious life and fruitful causes of spiritual decline. Some amusements in common use are positively demoralizing, and furnish the first easy steps to the total loss of character.

"We therefore look with deep concern on the great increase of amusements and on the general prevalence of harmful amusements, and lift up a solemn note of warning and entreaty, particularly against attendance upon immoral, questionable, and misleading theatrical or motion picture performances; against dancing, and against such games of chance as are frequently associated with gambling, all of which have been found to be antagonistic to vital piety, promotive of worldliness, and especially pernicious to youth.

Admonished on Example.

"We affectionately admonish all our people to make their amusements the subject of careful thought and frequent prayer, to study the subject of amusements in the light of their tendencies, and to be scrupulously careful in this matter to set no injurious example."

Direction is also given to various agencies to carry on education in the church so as to form correct standards as follows:

"We instruct our board of temperance, prohibition, and public morals, or its successor, to lead the church in a campaign of education which shall reveal to our people, both young and old, the dangers lurking in the amusements against which we warn. We instruct the above named board to produce and disseminate from time to time such scientifically prepared literature as shall awaken our people to the individual and social consequences of improper and excessive amusements."

New "Law" for Ministers.

Other action by the conference makes it possible to deprive a minister of his ministerial standing and ordination papers if he becomes so unacceptable that he cannot be given a pastorate by reason of his secularity or other objectionable traits. This is new legislation which is expected to have far reaching effects.

A letter from James L. Davis, secretary of labor, was read to the audience. Among other things, he said:

"We need more of old fashioned religion, which makes itself felt through the church, the home, and the school, and thus fits us for our daily contact with our fellow men."

ULSTER BORDER TOWNSMEN WANT IRISH ROW ENDED

Laws of Two States Tangle Trade. 7

BY JOHN STEELE.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1924: By The Chicago Tribune.]

STRABANE, Ireland, May 17.—Strabane, a town in Ulster, is going through an experience similar to the Free State towns of Clones and Pettigo. A large part of its market area is in the Free State and cut off by the boundary. Perhaps it suffers less than some of the other towns because it has more of a monopoly.

The only other considerable market within the reach of the farmers is Finn Valley. The farmers are still compelled to bring cattle, pigs, butter, flax, and oats into Strabane markets, but they are forced to curtail their purchases of dutiable goods in the shops on the Free State side of the boundary.

All Want a Settlement.

Both sides of the boundary, Strabane on the Ulster side and Lifford, Stranorlar, Ballybofey, and a score of the other villages on the Donegal side are all disgusted with the present situation and anxious to end it. It would not be unfair to say neither cares very much what kind of a solution is made as long as the boundary is wiped out.

On the Free State side this lukewarmness is accounted for in some measure by the fact that the taxation in the Free State is heavier than in Ulster and times are bad.

Because the income tax is higher the small farmer on the Free State side of the river has to pay 5 shillings more for a pair of boots than on the Ulster side. Naturally he wants to know why and is hard to satisfy.

The feelings here are quite as elsewhere along the border. This area was the scene of serious fighting between the Free Staters and Republicans, with the Ulsterites taking an occasional hand, a year ago, but now all is quiet. There is a strong force of Ulster specials here and Free State troops are quartered at Drimboe castle, in Stranorlar. The feeling between the two forces is excellent.

SELF-INFLICTED WOUNDS FATAL.

Bulgaria to Take Marriage and Divorce from Church

SOFIA, Bulgaria, May 17.—[By the Associated Press.]—Agitation is on foot in Bulgaria for legislation that shall take away from the church the functions of marriage and divorce, which have been exclusively in its hands since the beginning of the orthodox church.

Outselling All Rivals

The Coach Is the Largest Selling Six-Cylinder Closed Car In the World

The Coach outsells all other closed Sixes. And 3,000 new buyers every week continue that acknowledgment of first place in value. It is exclusive to Hudson and Essex.

In no other type can you get so much in closed car advantages and assured mechanical satisfaction, within hundreds of dollars of the cost.

Prior to the Coach a closed car at moderate cost on a first rate chassis was not to be had. The Coach at open car cost gives all the utility you can get in any closed car with the mechanical excellence of the Hudson or Essex chassis—both famous for performance and reliability.

More than 135,000 Coaches are in service. Nearly three years of service has established their enduring reliability. Today, when getting most for one's money is all-important, proved reliability counts above all else.

What closed car at near the Coach price offers such convincing evidence of value? Is it any wonder it outsells all rivals?

What Thousands of Owners Are Saying:

"The performance of the New Essex Six Coach is truly marvelous. For power, pep, and all-around performance it beats anything I ever drove." —Clyde L. King, 2898 E. Grand Blvd., Detroit

"This car far surpasses any make of car I have ever driven, for smoothness of operation and ease in handling, and I am more than ever convinced that the Essex Six is the best buy on the market today." —S. D. Fiedler, Lindsborg, Kansas

"We find the new Essex Six a very wonderful little car in every way." —R. F. Baldwin, Mgr. Lesser-Goldman & Wm. Almy Co., Fall River, Mass.

"I do not see how the Essex people can put out such a good car for the price." —Paul Loughridge, Denver, Colorado

"Everyone that buys an Essex Six gets more than his money's worth." —W. H. Bailey, 1621 Reynolds St., Brunswick, Ga.

Why Buy An Open Car?

You Pay No More for All Closed Car Comforts in the Coach Exclusive to Hudson and Essex

The great buying choice of the year is "Closed Car Comforts at Open Car Cost." The Coach created this revolutionary issue. It is exclusive to Hudson and Essex. No other type and no other car shares its advantages. Everywhere it is displacing open cars. Mark well what that means.

ESSEX SIX COACH $975

HUDSON SUPER-SIX COACH $1550

Freight and Tax Extra

Drastic Effect on Resale Values, Too

All buyers must consider how this overwhelming trend to closed cars affects resale values. They must judge whether they will accept the depreciation of a type that is passing from favor. The Coach, as the wanted car, maintains a high resale value, against the waning desirability of the open car.

The Car for Everyone

High Cost for Closed Car Comfort is no longer a question.

Never will the old-time popularity of open cars return. It was based on price advantage. Now that is lost. In the Coach you pay no more for all closed car utility, comfort and distinction. No wonder the Coach is the largest selling 6-cylinder closed car in the world, with sales exceeding 3,000 every week.

And Famous Chassis Value

In two and a half years, and in the hands of more than 135,000 owners, the Coach has proved a staunchness and serviceability never before associated with a closed car. It gives every utility you can get in any closed car. All concede unsurpassed chassis reliability. The price removes it from all competition. You too want "the car for everyone."

Which?--

at the Same Price—the Half-Utility of an Open Car, or the All-Year Comforts and Service of the Coach? It is the one Important Question Before Buyers Today.

Hudson and Essex Are of One Quality

More Than 3,000 Sales a Week

Important Notice to Buyers:

This remarkable value offered in Hudson and Essex is matched by the astonishingly low parts prices and the progressive service policy that keep maintenance down to a minimum. Be sure and get parts price list from your dealer.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

Mr. Ray Grimes produced a roaring triple for the edification of about 25,000 fans at the north side park yesterday, and it took enough wind out of the Giants' sails to enable the Cubs to cop the final of the series for an even break. The count was 4 to 2.

Grimes smacked his long clout in the fourth, which happened to be one of the two innings in which the Killefers had two runners on the paths. He also scored, and this trio of runs, along with a loner picked up in the seventh, not only wiped out a slim lead promoted by the champions in the third but gave the home crew such a tight grip on victory that they couldn't be jarred loose in the ninth when the hostiles threatened to start something.

Good Support Aids Vic.

Vic Aldridge started the slabbing for the victors, and he was still there at the finish, which is more than can be said for Virgil Barnes, who endeavored to advance the Giants' pennant cause. Vic was nicked for eight blows, which was one more than the Cubs could collect, but he didn't allow three to an inning, as did Barnes in the fourth. Vic also was aided by good support, two Giants being cut down at the plate and three at third base.

Aldridge's only real bad round was the third, when, despite a double, pass, and single, the Giants could score only once. Groh did the doubling, and Snyder drew the walk with none dead. Barnes tried to sacrifice, but forced Groh at third. Then Young tapped to Grimes, and Snyder was wiped out at the plate. Frisch managed a single that scored Barnes, but when a double steal was attempted Young was killed off at the plate.

Statz Starts Fireworks.

The first incident in the round that won it—the fourth—was a roller to Groh that Statz beat out. Hollocher, back in action after a day with the doctors, followed with a swat to right and Statz went to third. Grantham forced Hollocher at second, but Grimes crowned the ball off the left center field fence for three sacks, and Statz and Grantham hustled home. Grimes did the same when Friberg arched a deep fly to center.

After getting this lead, which was padded a bit in the seventh by a pass to Friberg and hits by Heathcote and Hartnett, Aldridge performed to suit himself until the ninth. Then Frisch singled and Meusel tripled—but possible complications were avoided when Hartnett scampered over to the stand and picked off a foul that the dangerous Terry had poked into the air.

HALF A LENGTH OUT IN FRONT OF CHILHOWEE

Beau Butler Third as 80,000 Cheer.

BY HARVEY T. WOODRUFF.

Louisville, Ky., May 17.—[Special.]—"Black Gold, Black Gold! It's Black Gold!" Bass shouts of exultation, greater in volume but no less vociferous, mingled with soprano shrills of ecstasy as Black Gold swung into the stretch in third position, echoed and reëchoed all through the most desperate finish of recent years and fairly burst forth in a mad paean as the small but handsome son of Black Toney flashed under the wire winner of the Golden Jubilee Derby at Churchill Downs this afternoon.

Half a length behind this colt, owned by a woman, was Chilowhee, another western colt. Only a nose further back was Beau Butler from the Idle Hour farm of E. R. Bradley, whose colors were carried to victory by Behave Yourself in 1921. Altawood, another western colt, was fourth. It was a clean sweep for the west of all money positions.

Bad Day for the East.

Behind this quartet came the blasted hopes of the east which had been so greatly feared in advance. Bracadale, the second string of the Harry Sinclair stable, was fifth, and Transmute, the better of the Whitney duo, was sixth. Mad Play, chief reliance of the east, was tenth.

Not in recent years has there been such a popular victory. The reception accorded the placed horses by the 80,000 spectators as they cantered back to the judges' stand after the finish was literally an ovation, swelling in volume until it reached a climax when Black Gold, following custom, was last to return. Then he received the floral horseshoe, symbolic of victory, while Col. H. C. Whitehead presented the gold plate in behalf of the Jockey club, to Mrs. R. M. Hoots of Tulsa, Okla., owner of the winner.

Not only was Black Gold backed into favoritism in the mutuels, but the backing represented many individual wagers, while the big money went on the eastern entrants. Tonight, it seemed as if every person in Louisville had wagered on the winner. Those who didn't were not admitting it.

Fair Price on Winner.

Two dollar mutuel tickets on Black Gold paid $5.50, $5.40, and $4.40, respectively for the three places. Chilowhee paid $12.30 place and $7.30 to show, while Beau Butler, as representative of the Idle Hour farm, was $4.30 to show.

Black Gold won the Louisiana Derby. He ran a mile here at Churchill Downs on a comparatively slow track in 1:37 4-5 and made a show of his field. This was the race which earned such a tremendous Kentucky and western following. Still, the breeding experts said the son of Adam, which as a racer stopped at five furlongs, could not carry stake weight one and one-quarter miles. Black Gold refuted that opinion.

The time for the race was 2:05 1-5, not so fas as the Derby has been run; but early pace always has much to do with the ultimate time; the first six furlongs were stepped to the comparatively slow time of 1:13 and the mile in only 1:39 1-5. The Derby had a gross value of $63,300, with $52,775 net to the owner of the winner, $6,000 to second, $3,000 to third, and $1,000 to fourth.

The Best Horse Wins.

Black Gold was the best horse as the race was run. They were away to a splendid start, with a bit of crowding shortly afterward when those from the inside rail and those from the outside rail clustered in the center of the track. It did not seriously affect the chances of the so-called contenders.

Jockey Mooney, on Black Gold, appeared to have supreme confidence in his mount. Drawing the rail position, Mooney took no chances of being pinched off in the scramble around the first turn if he tried to maintain the rail position against early speed. Instead, he took the favorite up and sailed into an opening where he would be clear to go around his field when the test came.

Black Gold disappointed those easterners who had expected him to be badly outfooted in the early stages, but justified the comment of those who

Every Day He Asks Five Persons, Picked at Random, a Question.

The Tribune will pay $5 for each question accepted for the Inquiring Reporter to ask. Send name and address with your question to "The Inquiring Reporter," Chicago Tribune. For today's question Paul Pendries, 172 Sixteenth street, Milwaukee, Wis., was awarded $5.

The Question.

Who do you think will win the Gibbons-Carpentier fight on May 31?

Where Asked.

Lincoln park.

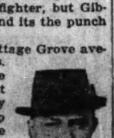
The Answers.

Clifford Deane, 1043 West Madison street, actor—Gibbons. I figure he's a good man, a better man than Carpentier. In his fight with Dempsey he showed that he can put up a clever fight and take a lot of punishment. A man who can take punishment has a big factor in his favor.

Floyd Patridge, 15 East Pierson street, meat cutter—I think Gibbons will win. A man who can stand up for fifteen rounds before Dempsey stands a good chance to lick Carpentier. Dempsey knocked Carpentier out in the fourth round. I'd like to see the bout at Michigan City, and I'll bet Gibbons wins.

Joe McDermott, 1311 Arthur avenue, clerk—Gibbons ought to win. He stayed fifteen rounds with Dempsey; he ought to stay fifteen rounds with Carpentier, and if he stays that long he's the winner. He's a heavier man than Carpentier, and he has knocked out better men than Carpentier has.

William J. Ford, in charge of exhibits, Chicago Art institute—Gibbons, by all means. Georges hasn't the punch; he's too refined, too ladylike to win against a solid, stanch fighter like Gibbons. Georges is a clever fighter, but Gibbons has the punch, and its the punch that counts most.



John Sabey, 3617 Cottage Grove avenue, waiter—Gibbons. Why? Because he's the better man; his past record shows that. Any man who can stand up against a man like Dempsey for fifteen rounds should have little trouble licking the Frenchman.

BADGERS RACE TO VICTORY IN FOUR WAY MEET

TABLE OF POINTS

Wisconsin	67	Chicago	26
Ohio State	58	Northwestern	25

Madison, Wis., May 17.—[Special.]—Wisconsin's well balanced track team won the Big Ten quadrangular meet here today with 67 points. Ohio was second with 58, and Chicago just nosed out Northwestern in the final event for third place, 26 to 25.

Chicago was practically eliminated from the meet before it started because part of the team missed the train. McFarlan, who was booked to win the 440, was one of the men left behind.

Payne of Ohio State, tooted as Olympic material, was booked to win handily, and set a rapid pace for half the distance and then quit when Wisconsin runners passed him. Reed of Wisconsin took first, and Piper, Wisconsin, came in a foot behind. Davis of Northwestern took third. Summaries:

CHILHOWEE ran a good race and headed BRACADALE in the last eighth, but tired slightly near the end. BEAU BUTLER closed a great gap and ran an excellent race. ALTAWOOD closed an immense gap after making a slow beginning. BRACADALE tired after leading to the stretch. TRANSMUTE was done after going the first three-quarters. MAD PLAY was always outrun. BAFFLING ran a good three-quarters. The others were never prominent.

KENTUCKY DERBY.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 17.—[Special.]—The Golden Jubilee Kentucky Derby was run today on historic Churchill Downs, which derives its name from the Churchill family, from whom the ground was acquired for racetrack purposes in 1874.

The first Derby was decided May 17, 1875, and was won by Aristides, affectionately known as "the little red horse." Aristides was a son of the noted sire Leamington. The value of the first Derby was $2,850, compared with the $50,000 of today. Fifteen faced the barrier..

There were forty-two nominations for the first Derby, at $50 each. The association added only $1,000, instead of $50,000, of which $200 went to the second horse. There was no third money. The route then was the true Derby distance of one and one-half miles, later thought too far for young horses so early in the year. Aristides traversed the distance, with only 100 pounds up, in 2:37¾. In 1896 the distance was reduced to one and one-quarter miles.

Since that time many illustrious names have been enrolled among the list of winners, including Hindoo, Spokane, Plaudit, Lieut. Gibson (owned by Charles Head Smith of Chicago), Old Rosebud, Exterminator, and Zev. Only one filly, Regret, in 1915, ever won the race.

For several years past first money has been worth more than $50,000, Morvich attaining the peak in 1922 with $52,775.

CROWD GOES MAD AS SLIM BLACK BEAUTY RACES IN

BY GENEVIEVE FORBES.

Louisville, Ky., May 17.—[Special.]—At thirteen minutes to 5 this afternoon a slim, slippery silhouette, all spirit and breeding and blackness, swam his powerful way and chopped his delicate way around the mile track at Churchill Downs until he heard 100,000 men, women, and little children shout a mighty prayer to "Black Gold! Black Gold! Black Gold!"

And the patrician young 3 year old knew that he had won the Golden Jubilee Derby for Mrs. R. M. Hoots of Tulsa, Okla., for all the west, and for thousands of "little fellows," whose ragged $5 bills had been spilled so faithfully across the boards in favor of the black colt.

An I-Told-You-So Air.

Black Gold looked pleased, but not too surprised. They hurled blossoms at him. They shrieked out moans of praise to J. D. Mooney, the vibrant little jockey in the old rose silks, with white cross sashes, and the bars on his silken sleeves that flapped about. They cried and screamed and yelled. And just as they grew quiet Black Gold would flip his thoroughbred head a bit and they would start in all over again.

The colt took the flowers and tolerated the adulant screams for a while; then he grew restive and those red nostrils of his dilated a bit. Then, straining every fiber in his expensive body, the toast of all Louisville looked toward his stable and seemed to say: "When do we eat?"

Back to Earth Again.

There are others in this town of pageantry thinking the same thing tonight. And tonight, as the backers of Black Gold's opponents explain to themselves why their "dope" ran for a fall, if they ask "When do we eat?" they'll not get the abundant response that Black Gold got, as he nosed through the wreath of roses and snuggled up against Jockey Mooney.

Today's Derby, of course, began to be won and lost centuries ago, when primitive man challenged his neighbor to take their ponies out to the edge of the plains and see which could run the fastest. But this fiftieth anniversary race on Churchill Downs had another beginning early this morning, when the folks who came to see the races and the folks who came to see the folks who watch the races started out to the Downs to make history and pageantry.

All Sorts Make Up Crowd.

Commanding millions, they tumbled, dishevel'ed and unshaven, out of private cars to beg a colored boy for a real tip on the ponies. Stern men of business pleaded with bank rolls for permission to ride on the back of an improvised taxicab. They came in cars, on trains, in airplanes, and on bicycles, to a horse race.

Prim spinsters crowded in on gamblers' laps and they all talked of "playing him on the nose" or of "shooting that one across the boards." Amiable ministers, a whole political caucus of politicians, beautiful women, and women not so beautiful, doctors and truck drivers, social register entrants and members in high standing in the "hoodlums' club;" they all piled into

STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER by Frank Smith

IS there such a thing as fair sportsmanship among eastern boxing promoters and managers? It doesn't seem so.

Not satisfied to row among themselves over the almighty dollar that goes with successful promoting in the east, they try to reach out into the west, where they don't belong and where they are not wanted. For years Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, and Wisconsin have been trying to keep the sport clean, endeavoring to put it on a plane where it could withstand criticism, only to have it receive a smack in the nose from some one who hasn't the interest of the sport at heart except in so far as it benefits his pocketbook.

It wasn't so long ago that the Pinkey Mitchell-Bennie Leonard row at Dexter Park pavilion spoiled all chances, at least for the time being, for a boxing law in Illinois. Neither party to that near-riot belonged here, yet they took it upon themselves to stage a disgrace the stench of which still remains in the nostrils of local and Illinois fans.

Through lack of foresight on the part of Billy Gibson, manager of American Light Heavyweight Champion Gene Tunney, he lost the first chance at Georges Carpentier on his return to the American ring. Aided by Jack Curley, who represented the Frenchman in this country, westerners went out and signed the French boxing idol to a contract that called for his appearance against Tommy Gibbons in Michigan City on May 31.

Gibson's date was June 16, but there was nothing in his contract with the Frenchman that prevented Georges from appearing in an American ring before that time. When the westerners outsmarted Gibson and his colleagues, as they seem to have been outsmarted on several occasions by rival eastern promoters, they went out of their way to break up a show the west is keen upon staging.

It is declared on good authority that some easterners approached Floyd Fitzsimmons' creditors offering to pay off all liens on the property, which are said to have been in the neighborhood of $35,000, and in this manner get control of the sky blue bowl and refuse to put on the Carpentier-Gibbons bout.

But again they were outsmarted. Frank Parker, treasurer of the Arena Boxing and Athletic club, got wind of the plan to put a crimp in the bout. He unloosed the purse strings, paid off all claims, and at the present writing his club is in full control of the arena, and, according to every one interested, the bout now is a certainty.

Gibson and his colleagues, according to dispatches from the east, as a last resort appealed to the American Legion to oppose the staging of the bout in Michigan City on the plea that a certain post, or posts, in the east were to benefit financially from a Carpentier-Tunney bout. Why didn't these easterners say something about the Legion when they first opposed the bout? From here it looks like a second thought and the American Legion is being made the goat of a few selfish eastern promoters.

Some New Yorkers have the concentrated idea that Manhattan island is the United States, that nothing of importance can happen outside its boundaries. We are glad to note that western American Legion posts have turned a deaf ear to the selfish cries from the east, and that they do not propose to be the catspaw for greedy promoters.

have seen recent races in which Black Gold showed fast early speed behind the pacemaker.

Bracadale in the Lead.

Thundering down the stretch for the first time and coming by the judges' stand, Bracadale was acting as pacemaker, with Wild Aster in second place, Baffling third, and Chilhowee fourth. Black Gold was fifth. Mad Play, the hope of the east, but a slow beginner, was back in the ruck. The Whitney pair were well up in the bunch, while Beau Butler was in about fifteenth place.

Mooney was riding carefully with Black Gold. He was taking no chances of trying to slide through openings, with possible chances of being cut off. The favorite was in close attendance on the leaders, but on the outside of three horses a couple of lengths behind the pacemakers.

After the Derby contenders had traversed a half mile of their journey, Bracadale was still leading a half length before Baffling, which was the same distance before Wild Astor, Chilhowee was fourth, and Black Gold fifth. Mad Play was in ninth position and Beau Butler eleventh. Racing down the back stretch Mooney was rating Black Gold comfortably in, fourth, then third position, while Bracadale had been pushed out to a two lengths' lead. Meantime Baffling had given up the quest but Transmute had been hurried into second place and seemed to be making a formidable bid. Chilhowee, which had been running side by side with Black Gold, was in fourth position.

Chilhowee Sets the Pace.

Rounding the stretch turn, Jockey A. Johnson on Chilhowee shot his mount to the front and turned into the stretch a half length before Bracadale in second position. Black Gold was right with this pair and from the finish line it looked as if they were on even terms. Altawood had moved up from the rear and was fifth. Beau Butler was still tenth but got through on the rail and set after the leaders in a stern chase of stamina and determination.

Straightened out after the turn, they came down the stretch toward the finish with Black Gold on the outside in about the middle of the track, Chilhowee alongside and Altawood next toward the rail with Bracadale and Beau Butler on the inside.

A furlong out jockeys of all the leaders were riding desperately. Mooney shook up Black Gold vigorously and Johnson and Lyke plied the whip. Less than 100 hundred yards from the finish Black Gold had established his margin of one-half length, which he maintained to the imaginary wire denoting the finish. Jockey Mooney rode him out, but did not punish him severely.

Finish Best in Years.

The finish between Chilhowee, Beau Butler, Altawood, and Bracadale was so close only the judges could separate them. Transmute, which had been fourth at the head of the stretch, faded away, and left the second division over the line, eight lengths back of Bracadale. Mad Play was a well beaten tenth.

So ended the golden jubilee Derby.

All weather conditions for the Derby were propitious, typical Mat Winn luck, as it has come to be known. The last two Derbies have been run on the second Saturday of the meeting instead of the opening day, as formerly. On the first day of the meeting for the last two years it has rained, while Derby day has been pleasant with a fast track.

When the day dawned clear and bright, pleasant but not uncomfortably warm, all fear of rain and a muddy track was dissipated. Shortly before the Derby, clouds loomed, but even had rain fallen it was too late to affect track conditions. The clouds passed, however, without precipitation.

Nineteen Go to Post.

Owners and trainers had named twenty to go to the post, expecting a good track, therefore there were no withdrawals, except the filly Glide, the only one of her sex entered, which chose to race in a handicap at a mile, but was unplaced. Nineteen went to the post, a field surpassed in numbers only last year, when twenty-one faced the barrier.

Whatever disappointment may have been felt by the absence of Wise Counsellor, Sir James and Sarazen was offset by the best finish of the last half dozen years. In the minds of the public it was completely offset by the victory of Black Gold, which will become a popular turf idol, whose every start for the balance of the season will be followed with intense interest by all who saw his triumph today.

OWNER OF DERBY VICTOR'S MOTHER RULED OFF TRACK

BY FRENCH LANE.

Louisville, Ky., May 17.—[Special.]—How R. M. Hoots, husband of the owner of Black Gold, was ruled off the turf in New Orleans because he refused to give up the mare Useeit, mother of today's Derby winner, in a claiming race, was related tonight by Mrs. Hoots as she was receiving congratulations of victory.

"Mr. Hoots had tried for many years to give us a high class horse," she said. "It was his lifetime ambition to see his colors in the Derby. To win it probably was beyond his fondest dreams, but he loved a horse. Our funds were limited in those days and as the ups and downs of racing go so went out fortune and it was mostly down. But we always had a few horses and of all of them Useeit, the mother of Black Gold, was his favorite.

Useeit Earns Her Keep.

"Useeit never amounted to much at the races, but at times she won and earned her keep. One day, not long before Mr. Hoots died, he had Useeit running in a claiming race at New Orleans. And after the race was run another owner claimed the pride of Mr. Hoots' heart.

"But before the claim had been registered with the stewards, Mr. Hoots had led Useeit, away to her stable. The stewards sent for him and told him he would have to give her up or be ruled off the turf. He preferred to be ruled off.

"Mr. Hoots' health failed him soon after that and before he died he told me never to sell Useeit, breed her to the best stallion possible. He told me some day a colt will arrive that would bring me a fortune."

That colt arrived three years ago and was the son of Black Tony.

Cup Presented to Mrs. Hoots.

Mrs. Hoots was in the crowd when the race was run. But, great as her excitement must have been, she gave no outward expression of her joy in victory.

Jockey Johnny Mooney had hardly brought Black Gold back to the judges' stand before Mrs. Hoots and her 18 year old son, A. A. Hoots, and the latter's wife had crowded their way to the railing to congratulate their rider. A second latgd the officials spied, hed and the little party from Tulsa, headed by Mrs. Hoots, was led into the stewards' stand.

General Manager Winn and the officials awaited her and as soon as Mooney could dismount and be weighed in he joined them in the stand. Trainer Webb then joined them and Col. R. C. Whitehead of the U. S. army presented the huge golden cup, emblematic of victory, to Mrs. Hoots, whose reply was: "I'm overwhelmed with joy and happiness."

Reward for Jockey Mooney.

The cup was too large for Mrs. Hoots to carry down out of the stand and the bouquets of flowers presented her by the jockey club too bulky for her to handle.

"Black Gold and Mooney, they both did their best, and I owe it to them," she said.

When asked if she would reward Jockey Mooney for the ride, she replied: "I certainly will. I always have for every race he rode for me and at last I'll be able to give him a present that will be worth while." She did not mention the amount of money nor the prize she would give the little fellow.

Jockey Mooney said he had to ride Black Gold out in the stretch run to beat off the desperate bid of Chilhowee and Beau Butler.

"I always felt we had plenty in reserve to win, even while we were rounding the first turn in such a bad position.

"Black Gold went on faster and faster as I gave him his head down the back stretch and into the last turn and on into the stretch. I didn't have to punish him to get that last rally which sent us to the front.

"It was a hard ride because the field was so big and because I had to go on the outside nearly all the way to pass up the ones that had been leading me from the time the barrier went up."

Trainer Webb is a typical character of the race track training fraternity. Round and fat and slow in his movements, it seemed to take him five minutes to realize he had saddled the winner of the Golden Derby.

"I guess its because he is a champion or something, but Black Gold is the easiest horse I ever trained," he said. "I've had him since he was a colt and I guess we know each other. I never asked him to work too hard, even in Louisiana last winter when we started work in earnest for the Derby run there last March."

Owner in the Background.

Mrs. Hoots and her son and his family live in Tulsa. They have been in Louisville for several days, but have kept in the background, making an occasional visit to Black Gold's stable and to Churchill Downs when he was working out. Even today they were not located in the Derby throngs until a few minutes before time for the Derby horses to come out.

Trainer Webb is also a native of Oklahoma while Jockey Mooney lives at New Orleans and got his start as a rider at the winter meetings there some years ago.

Black Gold first saw the light of day on a farm near Lexington, Ky., and was kept there until taken south as a 2 year old to make his first start in any race a year ago last January at New Orleans.

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

Boston, Mass., May 17.—[Special.]—Something happened in the seventh inning of today's game and the White Sox did themselves out of a contest which they might as well have won. The Red Sox took the battle, 5 to 4, but the Chi Sox made it easy for them.

Ted Lyons and Bill Piercy had been working along in very good order and Boston was leading by a score of 3 to 1 in the seventh, when the Sox bobbed up and became dangerous, but failed to tie the score and destroyed the prospects of a fat lead by their own stupidity.

The horrid stuff was in this manner: French started the seventh with a single, and Ray Schalk coaxed a pass. Archdeacon was sent to bat for Lyons. Then occurred boner No. 1. French evidently became twisted in the signs and started for third on the first ball pitched. He was thrown out and Archdeacon did not swing. So much for that.

Here're the Boners.

Archdeacon later came through with a single, which put Schalk on second. Archy was forced by Elsh and Schalk inhabited third. Hooper singled to score Schalk and to plant Elsh on the far corner. There was a lull in the proceedings. Suddenly Clark fell on Elsh and tagged him with the ball, which he had concealed about his person after it was returned from right field. Ed Walsh, acting as manager in place of Johnny Evers, was the coach involved. The revival of this ancient trick cut the rally short and left the Sox in such shape that they never did tie the score.

In spite of these toward incidents, the Sox pulled themselves together in the eighth inning and drove Bill Piercy from the mound. It was necessary to call on old Jack Quinn to get the side out, and the Chicago team was one run short of a tie when he accomplished this.

The game started as a pitchers' battle with Lyons and Piercy working well. Boston scored one in the second on Harris' double, a wild throw by Sheely and a hit by O'Neill. The Sox tied it in the third. Hooper and Collins singled and Hooper came home on a force out.

Bostons Sock Lyons.

Boston took liberties with Lyons in the sixth. Veach, the first man up, singled, and Harris walked. Boone donated the customary sacrifice, and both runners scored when Clark singled to right.

Then the one run rally in the seventh. Boston took advantage of the Sox state of mind by making two in their share of that round. Blankenship retired a pair of Boston batsmen when the fun started. Flagstead walked and Wamby singled to center. Elsh made a mess of the ball and both runners took extra bases. Veach walked and then Harris shot a liner to right. Hooper might have captured the ball but the sun bothered him and he started late, the drive falling in front of him for a double, two runs scoring.

A remarkable throw by Falk saved further damage in the eighth. Clark was safe as French dropped his easy fly and O'Neill singled him to third. Lee hit a liner near the foul line. Falk got the ball after a hard run and his back was turned to the plate when Clark left third, but he threw accurately to Schalk and the run was cut off.

Sox Start Rally, Fail.

In the first of the eighth the Sox came within one of tying and made the final scores of the game. Collins walked, and after Sheely was out Kamm singled to left. Falk singled to right, scoring Collins and sending Kamm to third. Piercy went to the showers and Quinn pitched. French foisted a sacrifice fly to Boone and let Kamm trot home.

The Sox persevered in the ninth and were withi na base hit of a tie, but could not make the grade. Black swung for Blankenship and singled to center. Elsh sacrificed. Then the situation looked prosperous, but Collins and Hooper were unable to knock the ball out of the infield and the game came to a sad close.

GOLFER DEFEATS BASEBALL STAR IN MIXED MATCH

HOLE-IN-ONE CLUB

CLARE Q. YOUNT, La Salle street broker, is the proud possessor of a home made hole-in-one. At the back of his north side residence he constructed a one hole course 70 yards in length and the other night made it in one. He now stands "ace high" in the neighborhood.

Gary, Ind., May 17.—Verne U. Young, president of the Gary and Rotary Theater co., made an ace at the third hole at the Gary Country club. It measures 210 yards. Mr. Young also made the 5th hole, 137 yards in two. He was playing with Henry Hay.

BY JOE DAVIS.

As the result of a challenge by a baseball star, a novel match was staged at the Green Valley Country club yesterday. G. H. Ackerman, the baseball player, was anxious to test his skill against J. P. Simons, a golfer. Both are members of the Electric club.

Simons used his golf clubs while Ackerman was allowed to "fungo hit" from the tee and through the green. While the latter got some good wallops, Simons made more home runs and won by a comfortable margin. On the greens Ackerman had to make regulation putts and he practically held his own.

Seven Meet Records Fall as Princeton Beats Harvard

Princeton, N. J., May 17.—[Special.]—Seven Harvard-Princeton varsity dual track meet records were broken in a brilliant meet in Palmer stadium here this afternoon as the Tigers trounced the Crimson, 89 2-3 to 45 1-3.

Vruno Hills bettered the old dual meet record for the shotput of 49 feet ¾ inch by four and one-quarter inches, and he also smashed the dual meet record in the hammer throw with a heave of 158 feet 11 inches. Hills, who was the individual star of the meet, also took first in the 120 yard high hurdles.

Other records lowered were as follows:

220 yard high hurdles, Scattergood, Princeton, from :25 to 24 2-5; 220 yard dash, McKim, Princeton, from :22 2-5 to :22 1-5; javelin throw, Gibson, Princeton, from 180 feet 6 inches to 187 feet 9 inches; half mile run, Watters, Harvard, from 1:58 4-5 to 1:55 4-5; discus throw, Carpenter, Harvard, from 130 feet 9 inches to 136 feet 9½ inches.

Watters race in the half mile run was the prettiest of the afternoon. He trailed Klump of Princeton at the first bend in the track, but in the second lap he sprang into a lead which he gradually increased until it amounted to almost a quarter of a lap at the finish.

Dick Croft and Bill Hitzrot, after trailing three Harvard men in the 440 yard dash, made a beautiful sprint after turning the bend, beat out Allen of Harvard and won first and second respectively.

BROOKINS SETS WORLD HURDLE MARK; IOWA WINS

Ames, Ia., May 17.—[Special.]—Charles Brookins of the University of Iowa broke the world's record in the 220 yard low hurdles on a straightaway at the annual Iowa college track meet here this afternoon when he went the distance in :23. His old record was :23 2-10. The Hawks won the meet easily, Ames placing second.

It had started to sprinkle rain when he ran the race. He was closely pushed by Taylor of Grinnell.

Shattering ninety-five targets yesterday, Eric Hall took the high gun honors at the Lincoln park traps. Hall's total was four better than his nearest competitors, W. M. Johnson, H. O'Day and W. E. Little. In the doubles, first place went to Thompson Ross, who registered forty-six breaks. Leading scores:

100 TARGETS—E. Hall, 95; W. E. Little, 91; W. M. Johnson, 91; H. O'Day, 91; G. W. Stabl, 90; C. D. McGary, 90; D. Bergen, 89; W. Sterling, 88; E. C. Buchan, 88; H. B. Henry, 86; C. O. Armes, 84.

25 PAIR DOUBLES—T. Ross, 46; E. Troeh, 46; C. O. Armes, 41; H. M. Rowley, 41; C. D. McGary, 40; E. Hall, 38; D. Bergen, 38; W. E. Little, 36.

Starting today at 10:30, the Eastern Illinois Trapshooters' league tourney will be held. It will be a fifty target registered event, which is expected to draw more than 125 shooters.

PURDUE BEATS HOOSIER TRACK SQUAD, 73 TO 62

Bloomington, Ind., May 17.—[Special.]—By taking more second and third places than Indiana, Purdue university won a dual track and field meet from the Crimson, 73 to 62, here today. Indiana won seven firsts and the Boilermakers garnered a like number. One first was split between the two teams on a tie.

YALE VARSITY JUNIOR CREWS SWEEP REGATTA

Princeton, N. J., May 17.—[Special.]—Yale's superbly smooth varsity crew swept to an overwhelmingly victory on Lake Carnegie this afternoon, leading Cornell by 6½ lengths and Princeton by more than 10, over the 1¾ mile course.

As a matter of fact, it was Yale's day almost entirely, the only Eli defeat being in the special 150 pound event between Harvard, Yale, and Princeton where the Crimson won by a scant eight feet with Princeton last.

Yale Invincible at Finish.

In the freshman and junior varsity races it was Yale's powerful sprint in the last forty strokes that clinched the victory, the Tigers trailing by a bare three feet in the junior varsity event in which Cornell was not entered. The freshman race likewise went to the Blue oarsmen who led the Tigers by a half length of open water with Cornell showing open water in third place.

Weather conditions were favorable with the exception of a strong headwind which tended to die down toward the end of the regatta but made starts difficult throughout.

Visitors Line Course.

The good weather attracted most of the house party crowd which was in town over the week-end, and out of town visitors lined both banks for some distance above the finish line.

Coach Leader's charges made a beautiful showing in every race, with their slow but smooth and powerful strokes gradually wearing down their rivals in the last of the distance.

COLUMBIA WINS IN INTERSTATE GAMES ON TRACK

Dubuque, Ia., May 17.—[Special.]—Brilliant work by Wiley enabled Columbia college to win the western interstate conference track meet for the second consecutive year, here today.

New conference records were established in the pole vault, half mile run, discus throw, shot put, high jump, broad jump, and one half mile relay. Coach Bill Spalding, University of Minnesota football mentor, was the starter.

FOR PLAYERS OF WHIST
by A. R. METCALFE

GOOD PARTNER IN WHIST IS THRILL.

GOOD defensive play is more uncommon than is good play on the part of the declarer, but there is a thrill in good partnership, which exceeds anything else derived from any indoor game. The amazing deal which follows illustrates something entirely new and deserves rank among the best.

North had the initial lead.

West secured six tricks only.

The Play by South.

The great feature of the deal was the refusal by south to cover the 9 of hearts at trick 1. The purpose of the play was by no means placing the lead, but was connected entirely with the club suit. There was a chance that the placing of the queen of hearts at trick 1 might make the jack of hearts in dummy a card of reëntry, and this would insure four tricks in the club suit for the declarer. South knew he could prevent dummy from securing the lead in either spades or diamonds, and did not believe that the declarer held enough tricks in the major suits to give him a total of eight were he unable to bring in the clubs. South hesitated as to taking the second round of clubs instead of waiting for the third. Apparently the 9 of clubs was marked in the north hand from the manner in which the clubs were played by the declarer. Had it been necessary to prevent the declarer from making the odd trick south would have won the second round of clubs, but there was a bare possibility that west was making a foxy play and concealing the 9. After the fifth trick the declarer still had a tenace in hearts and could secure two more tricks in that suit, provided it were led by north. South had intended to bid diamonds and direct his partner's lead, but east hesitated perceptively before passing and south feared that a diamond bid might cause east to switch to hearts, and therefore preferred to allow the no trump bid to stand. The play of south was unusual and very clever.

The Play by North.

The writer played the north hand in this deal, but had no play of importance to make except to get rid of the king and queen of spades. In other words, to retain a card of suit instead of a card of reëntry, in order that he might not be obliged to lead hearts up to tenace remaining in the declarer's hand.

Play by Declarer.

There was little that the declarer could do in this deal except to make his king of hearts at trick 11. At that time west still hoped to force a lead from north up to his king and 7 of hearts, and failed to accurately place the remaining cards. He said he thought north was bluffing with king of spades and still held the jack.

All these and many more refinements are included in Master Body equipment.

Knowing these great advantages, you might think Master Bodies are expensive. But they're not. Their cost is surprisingly low. You get a liberal allowance for your old Ford body. And remember, you can buy on easy installments if you wish. Drive up to our salesroom today! Inspect this Master Body!

$17,000 NEEDED FOR CHICAGO'S OLYMPIC QUOTA

Chicago's quota of $50,000 to the general Olympic fund is not completed, according to Everts Wrenn, who is receiving the contributions. A little more than $33,000 has been turned over to William R. Dawes, treasurer, but the remainder is expected before the final Olympic trials are held in Boston on June 13 and 14.

Wrenn said Chicago has a fine chance to get the Olympic games of 1928, and, if the quota is raised quickly, American representatives will have a talking point when the subject is brought up after this year's event, which will be held in France.

Recent contributions to the Chicago fund include:

Continental and Commercial bank, $250; D. Mark Cummings, $250; Central Trust Company of Illinois, $200; First National bank, $200; Illinois Merchants bank, $200; Henry J. JANE STANAGE.

Chicago girl who will endeavor to win the woman's national dirt track auto title in a match race at the North Shore track today.

DIRT TRACK RACING COMES NORTH TODAY

Dirt track auto racing activity shifts to the north side this afternoon for the opening events of the season at the North Shore Polo club speedway at Lincoln avenue and Peterson road, where six races will be held under the sanction of the United Race Drivers' association.

Five of the races will be for men, while women drivers will compete in a special challenge match race in which the national women's dirt track championship will be at stake. Miss Elfreda Mais of Indianapolis, holder of the title, will be challenged by Miss June Stanage, a 19 year old Chicago girl. Late last night several other challenges had been received, and there is a possibility that a special match race may have to be held to determine who should challenge Miss Mais for the special event.

Miss Mais Experienced Driver.

Miss Mais is an experienced driver with many short distance records to her credit. Miss Stanage was not a whit daunted by Miss Mais' reputation in accepting her challenge, however, and told speedway officials she could "drive anything with four wheels and a fast motor, and would meet Miss Mais at any distance and under any conditions."

Old rivalries among the dirt track stars will flame up in the heat of the competition. One of the contests will be between George Beck, driver-promoter of the North Shore track, and Esthan Wenneston.

How to Get There.

Grandstand accommodations have been enlarged to seat 6,000 people and there is ample room for parking more than 1,000 automobiles. Any cross town car connecting with Western avenue lines, which can be taken north to Peterson avenue, will lead to the race. The automobile route runs north on Sheridan road to Bryn Mawr avenue, west to Ridge avenue, north to Peterson avenue, and west to the track.

ROBY RACES TODAY

Eight cars in the heavy class and twelve in the light will compete today at Roby speedway, 108th and Indianapolis avenue, in two fifteen mile races and a twenty mile final.

A classy field of drivers, headed by Cliff Woodbury and Paul Clancy, will be out for the prizes and records. The two drivers hold more than half of the midwest dirt track marks. Al Waters, Leslie Allen, Al Coty and Ed Bernbach will add to the thrills in the heavy car race. Ed Heckler is a favorite for the light car race. Sam Davis, driving 999, Roy Nonneman, B. A. Murray and George Lyons will be in the running, however. The races start at 2:30 p. m.

DON'T FORGET TO FILE YOUR BIKE ENTRIES TODAY

When the entry lists for the third annual bicycle Derbies of THE TRIBUNE, to be held next Sunday morning at 9 o'clock in Humboldt Park, are closed at midnight tonight, the entrants listed the field will represent the greatest ever gathered together for an event of its kind. It is estimated, with a number of entries yet to be tabulated, that about 500 nominations have been received.

The bicycle Derbies of THE TRIBUNE are staked each year for the youth of the country. It is the object of these Derbies to promote interest in outdoor sports among young people and to encourage their participation in athletics. With seven races on the program there is an event for every boy and girl regardless of his or her age.

Mail Your Entry Today.

While the entry lists close tonight at midnight, those entries received tomorrow bearing today's postmark will be accepted. This stand has been adopted because of the retarded movement of mails on Sunday and will allow any riders who may decide at the last minute to compete a chance to get into the field.

Featuring the program will be the twenty-five mile handicap. In the two previous Derbies this race naturally drew the largest entry. The handicaps are fixed by the handicapping board of the Amateur Bicycle League of America, the controlling body of all amateur bike racing in the country, and the riders will be placed in time classes according to their past performances.

The A. B. L. of A. handicappers have a card index in which the performance of every rider in a regular sanctioned meet has been recorded, and it is on these records that the time allowances will be handed out. THE TRIBUNE races are sanctioned by the A. B. L. of A and is strictly an amateur meet.

Six Other Races.

The other six events on the day's program include races at 4 2-5 miles for riders in classes A, B, and C, and 2 1-5 mile races for riders in the novice class, for boys under 16, and for girls. No entry fee is required to compete in any event on the program. All that is required is that the entrants cut out the blank appearing on the sporting pages, fill in and mail as directed. Remember, today is your last chance!

Winners in the Derbies will be rewarded with merchandise certificates in the big mercantile houses of the city. These orders will be distributed to the victors at the end of the day's racing. This method of reward has been fixed in order to allow each winner to select his own prize. In many other races medals and cups have been the rewards, but many of the riders have such large collections of such trophies they are more pleased to get a prize selected by themselves.

Competent Officials in Charge.

Competent officials, men well known in the local sporting world, will handle the races. Arthur Gardiner, one of the leading figures in the local bike sport, will be referee, while Julian T. Fitzgerald, western representative of the A. B. L. of A., heads a host of other well known sporting men who will act in official capacities. The complete list of officials will be announced early next week.

The races all will be staged around the oval drive in Humboldt park. The track has been measured and the times will be accepted by the A. B. L. of A. as accurate, and any records established will be recognized.

Officials of the West Parks of Chicago are coöperating with THE TRIBUNE in the running of the Derbies. The West Parks police, headed by Capt. William Stocker, will patrol the course and see that the racers are not in any way interfered with by the spectators, while the officers and commissioners of the West Park system are giving their hearty support to the meet.

40,000 TO SEE U. S. AND FRANCE AT RUGBY TODAY

PARIS, May 17.—The Rugby match between the United States and France tomorrow is certain to break all 1924 Olympic games crowd records. The advance sale forecasts an attendance of about 40,000. The match is being given greater prominence than any other Olympic event thus far.

The French players gathered in Paris today and had their first practice together since they defeated the Russian team May 3. The Americans rested.

Referee Freethy told Manager Samuel Goodman of the American team he would give the rules the broadest possible interpretation, but would not stand for any rough play. The American manager assured the referee his men would play a clean, hard game, but that if they were penalized for breaking rules he was desirous that the referee inform Capt. Slater what particular rule had been transgressed so the offense might not be repeated.

Manager Goodman told Freethy that in one of their matches in England the American team had been penalized fifteen times for the same mistake, which the referee refused to divulge until after the match.

Woods and Waters

by BOB BECKER

HAVE you seen any albino robins this spring? Judging by reports from bird fans in middle western states there are quite a number of "whiteys" scattered throughout the country. But the town of New Lisbon, Wisconsin, seems to have the largest albino robin population as that community boasts of four. Dr. E. H. Townsend informs us that the four showed up about the 18th of April and since then have been frequenting his yard. Rev. T. Hennessy of Milford, Michigan, reports that he has been watching an albino bird which has built her nest in that town and is now incubating. Her mate is a robin with normal plumage and New Milford ornithologists are waiting to see if any of the young robins will be albinos.

Lou Klewer writing from Toledo, Ohio, says that "albino robins are not a rarity in this vicinity. At Lakeside, Ohio, for a number of years an albino has appeared." Both Lewistown and Woodstock, Illinois, have also reported examples of albinism. Charles Proctor of Lewistown says that he has observed a robin with patches of white on his back and wings, while E. F. Meyer informs us that Woodstock was home sweet home to an albino robin two years ago.

Well, we have one of "them" holds hanging around this place now. The other night when a drizzling rain was falling we were standing at a window watching the antics of courting mourning doves. Suddenly from around a corner of the house a robin appeared, intent upon bagging fat, juicy worms. A second glance convinced us that he wasn't "right." No sir-ee. His breast was a washed out not-much-of-anything color. On top of his head was a clump of white feathers, while the back and tail were wholly white. We're going to keep our eye on this fellow.

It's not every day in the week that an animal like the big brown bear of Alaska helps man, his greatest enemy, to gain wealth, yet that is what the bears in the Cold Bay district of the territory have done as they led Alaskans to the Cold Bay oil fields where several big companies are now drilling for this precious fuel.

Capt. Austin Lathrop of Anchorage told us of these brown bear "guides" as he was the original finder of the Cold Bay oil fields. In that country there are no forests. Grass and scrub growth one to ten feet high cover the ground for miles. It's a barren windswept region with few inhabitants. For centuries oil has been seeping from the ground and with the lighter properties evaporating, pools of heavy black oil [non-volatile properties] have collected. The big bears coming out of hibernation in the spring made for these pools as they liked to wallow in this stuff. It must be a corking fine method of getting rid of any insects which use the big bears as hosts. Returning to their haunts by way of well beaten trails the oil soaked bears brushing against the grass and other vegetation along the trails left behind them indelible black streaks which could be seen for some distance if one were to sit upon a ridge and scan the country with binoculars.

SIESTA ADDED TO LOCAL CLUB YACHTING FLEET

Chicago yachtsmen's hopes for retaining the historic Mackinac trophy against a Canadian invasion this summer were bolstered yesterday by news from New York that the seventy-two foot yacht yawl, Siesta, has been sold to Marvin S. Haskell, who will sail the big ship under C. Y. C. colors.

The neew addition to the local fleet is by far the largest yacht of her kind ever sailed on the great lakes. From tip of bowsprit to boomkin she measures more than 100 feet and carries more than 3,000 feet of working canvas.

Siesta is expected to start for Chicago in company with Dorinda, Gordon Seagrove's new sloop, tomorrow or Tuesday. The two yachts will run up the Hudson river and through the New York state barge canal under their auxiliary power, putting in masts and setting sail at Buffalo.

The Powerful Jewett— Its Performance Is a Tonic!

YES, you'll find Jewett performance refreshing if you're one of the vast majority who drive month after month, less-than-satisfied!

Do you shift gears a lot in traffic; practically every time you turn a corner? Do you have a bucking, kicking motor to manage when you slow down? Do you itch with impatience when you want to pick up smartly? And does every hill lick your motor back into second or low or must you rush it?

Thousands have lost their zest for driving because of such experiences! Their cars have become mere conveniences instead of joyous companions.

And Then—They Drive a Jewett

And then—they drive a Jewett. Settle back comfortably behind the wheel. Lots of leg-room. Wheel is pitched just right. Press on the starter—and the soft purr that results tells you Jewett's fifty-horsepower, Paige-built motor is smooth and ready.

Now press the gentle Paige-type clutch (you could do it with your hand, it's so easy) and shift into low. Shift any way you want to, fast or slowly—there's no sound. Smoothly Jewett starts as you release the clutch—then, just as quietly go through second into high. Did it like a veteran, didn't you—and it was easier than in your old car! (Easy control—a Jewett trait!)

A High-Gear Wonder

Notice the finger-touch guidance. Wheel turns easily because of ball-bearing steering spindles. Now a little speed, perhaps. Jewett's motor is "rarin' to go." The speedometer moves to 40—50—60—and more. Quiet too, wasn't it! Just a Niagara of power and speed—willing, eager, masterful.

Now let Jewett calm down—watch that speedometer. See—it's wavering at 2 miles an hour—and you KNOW you're in high and that you are not slipping your clutch. Isn't that smooth, quiet pulling? Did you ever see anything like it in your life? No fuss, no uncertainty—just the marvelous performance of a thoroughbred motor.

Now pick up a little to 5 miles an hour. Ask your friend sitting beside you to hold his watch and give you the word "Go." Tramp on the throttle—hard! Any fuss? No! Just a smooth, eager rush to 25 miles an hour in 7 seconds, in high. Think of the "kick" Jewett owners get out of such performance.

The Why of All This?

Most power for weight—that's why. Jewett has a cubic inch of piston displacement for every 11¼ pounds car weight. In certain "light" sixes each cubic inch must pull 13.4 pounds—14.2—12.8—17.6—not one but will be sluggish compared with Jewett.

And Jewett is husky in proportion to its power. It weighs 2805 pounds—200 to 400 pounds more than "light" sixes. 6-inch-deep frame, Paige-Timken axles, front and rear; all-steel universal joints.

So, we say to all you motorists who are driving light, under-powered cars—drive Jewett! In all the world no car like this! Jewett combines mechanical superiorities and advantages no other car possesses. Come in and prove this—come in and get a real driving "tonic"—just as many miles as you want—in Jewett.

CHICAGO SPORT FANS TURNING TO GEORGES-TOM GO

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

With the Kentucky Derby now a matter of history and sports fans returning to Chicago today, kindled interest is expected to be shown in not only the international match between Tom Gibbons of St. Paul and Georges Carpentier of France at Michigan City on May 31 but also in the show at East Chicago tomorrow night and the one at Aurora on Thursday.

That the gate for the Gibbons-Carpentier bout will run close to $200,000 may be gathered from the fact that the money represented by reservations amounts to over $75,000. The general sale will open tomorrow and Joe Coffey, president of the syndicate which will stage the contest, claims there will be few reserved seats left on the day of the contest.

Fans Show Increased Interest.

With Gibbons and Carpentier on the ground and in active training the fans are beginning to ponder over the relative merits of the two men and the probable winner. Local opinion is practically unanimous in favor of Gibbons, who is expected to win by either a knockout or on points.

While there has been some wagering at places where fistic fans congregate in the loop, more money will be put up in the next two weeks. Gibbons is known as a square shooter and he is so anxious to secure a return engagement with Jack Dempsey for the world's heavyweight title that he will stop the Frenchman with his first punch if possible.

Two Scientific Boxers.

Carpentier, however, has his admirers, who respect his right hand. Those who saw the Frenchman try to wrest the title from Dempsey claim he jarred the champion with his right and if the blow had been lower the title might have changed hands. Since that time Georges has engaged in several fights, one of which resulted in the loss of his world's light heavyweight championship to Battling Siki, who afterward was beaten by Mike McTigue.

Both are scientific boxers. They are not of the slugging type, but there should be several rallies which may take place as early as the first round.

Georges Boxes Here Today.

Carpentier will appear at the White park this afternoon at 3 o'clock when he will go through all his training stunts. He intends to open a strenuous two weeks of training at Michigan City tomorrow.

Promoter Mullen, who will feature Bud Taylor of Terre Haute and Connie Curry of Sioux City, Ia., in his main attraction at Aurora on Thursday night, is bent on having some of the attractive talent beaten.

Joe O'Hara of Fort Dodge, Ia., who is making Chicago his home, has demanded an exorbitant price to appear against Anthony Downey of Columbus. Promoter Mullen believes Downey has an excellent chance to win the popular verdict and then O'Hara will come down in his price for future appearances. The same is true of other fighters on the card.

Garvey In Debut.

While the clashes between Taylor and Curry and O'Hara and Downey are billed as the featues, a lot of interest will center around the professional debut of Ed Garvey, the former Notre Dame football player, who meets Angelo de Lorenzo in one of the four round preliminaries. Garvey is trying to follow the example of Sully Montgomery, the former Centre college gridiron star, who got away to a good start last week by knocking out Joe Burke of Detroit.

The fans are looking forward to the bout between Willie Ames of Akron, O., and Frankie Garcia. Ames recently scored a decisive victory over Johnny Dundee, world's featherweight champion, at Canton. The Frankie Schaeffer-Billy McCann eight rounder is also attracting attention, while two other bouts complete the card.

A double windup will feature George Cowego's show at East Chicago tomorrow night. Mickey O'Dowd of Muncie is slated to mix with Frankie Garcia in part of the main event, while Frankie Schaeffer of Chicago and Billy Henry of South Chicago will be the principals in the other half. Patsy Rocco, the East Chicago favorite, will take on Izzy Tanner of St. Paul in one of the preliminaries.

CAN HE DO IT?

Johnny Meyers, former middleweight champion, will meet Joe Parelli, who jerked the crown from his head in Milwaukee some time ago, in a return match at the Coliseum on Tuesday night. The Pole says it's a cinch the title will be taken from Italy.

CLUB BUYS ARENA FOR TOM - GEORGES BOUT

Through its treasurer, Frank Parker, the Arena Boxing and Athletic club, which will conduct the ten round bout between Tom Gibbons and Georges Carpentier at Michigan City on May 31, has purchased the sky blue arena in which the contest will be held. The new club also has assumed all liabilities of Floyd Fitzsimmons, who promoted shows last summer.

This action was taken when it became known that certain eastern boxing promoters were dickering for the purchase of the arena and were ready to put $35,000 into the deal. Walter Greenebaum, president of the Michigan City Chamber of Commerce, heard of the proposed arrangements and communicated immediately with Treasurer Parker, who lost no time in closing the deal for the arena.

If the arena had passed into the hands of easterners, the Gibbons-Carpentier bout never would have taken place, as it was only a scheme to prevent Carpentier from appearing in the west, according to Treasurer Parker.

Aside from the withholding of official sanction, nothing will prevent the contest from taking place. Gov. Branch yesterday said he will have representatives at the ringside to stop the bout if it shows signs of becoming a prize fight. Tickets will be placed on sale tomorrow at the usual places in the loop.

It was the third consecutive year for the Chicago lad to cop the meet. His decisive victory, 6—2, 6—2, over Holloway of New Trier gave him his victory in straight sets.

Martin and Stupple of Deerfield-Shields tied for first in the golf tournament. They each shot 236 for the fifty-four holes. Panheimer of Proviso, with 241, was third.

Johnny Meyers, the popular Polish grappler, who was recognized as the middleweight champion for nearly five years, will attempt to win back his crown at the Coliseum on Tuesday night when he meets Champion Joe Parelli in a finish match, best two in three falls. Regardless of results of other contests, the main bout will start promptly at 10 o'clock, according to Promoters Ed White and Joe Coffey.

Like many other champions of former years, Meyers lost his title to Parelli in Milwaukee early in the spring by underrating the Italian, who is now recognized as one of the strongest in the 158 pound division. Johnny was out of shape for that match, with the result Parelli beat him two out of three falls.

Weigh in At 158 Pounds.

Since he won the championship Parelli is making his opponents toe the mark. Joe never scales more than 156 pounds and if any of the contenders want an opportunity to win the title they must make the middleweight poundage of 158 pounds. For this reason the champion insists that Johnny make 158 pounds at 6 o'clock on Tuesday night. Parelli also insisted that Meyers put up a $500 forfeit to make the weight. This the former titleholder has placed with the sporting editor of THE TRIBUNE.

Keen rivalry exists between the champion and challenger. This was shown last week when Parelli changed his training quarters from the Arcade to the Mullen-McGoorty gymnasium. Previously both had worked at Kid Howards gym until the Italian finally discovered Meyers was looking him over too closely to get a line on his offensive tactics.

Fans All Het Up.

Not only does bitter rivalry exist between the principals, but the same is true of the Italian and Polish followers of the game. Johnny has long been a favorite with the Poles, while the Italians are backing Parelli to a man. Considerable money has already been wagered on the result, but neither has been made the favorite.

As most fans know, Meyers is master of many holds, the head scissors and wrist lock particularly. He is also efficient with the body scissors and double wrist lock, while there are few men in the game more expert at double wrist locking from any position than Meyers.

Aside from the step-over toe hold, Parelli is mastering the secrets of the head lock. Johnny does not fancy the hold and he has not much resistance for the bone crusher. At any rate Parelli has two good holds to use on Meyers and Johnny has never shown a tendency to break them with the regularity which results in success.

Oak Park's Track Team Wins Class A Title in U. of Illinois Tournament

Urbana, Ill., May 17.—[Special.]—Oak Park High school, headed by the fleet Royer and Coffin, flashed to victory in class A today and won the state high school track championship in their class in decisive style. Coach Frank Winters' suburbanites accumulated 46 points, with Champaign, their closest rivals, behind with 21.

Girard High school won the championship in class B, which was more closely contested. Coach Cushman's athletes made 30 points, closely pressed by Chesterfield with 18. Hinsdale finished sixth, Wheaton was seventh, and Pullman tenth.

Royer Individual Star.

The all-around big individual star of the big competition was Royer of Oak Park. He won both hurdles and ran in the relay in which Oak Park and Hyde Park tied for supremacy. Coffin won the 220 yard dash in :21 4-5 and took second in the 100. Other first place men for the suburbanites were Lamb in the mile and Walworth in the broad jump. Kelso added a second place in the half.

Three Records Broken.

Three new state interscholastic records were established. Lewis of Carlinville put the shot 50 feet 2¾ inches, breaking the old record of 50 feet 1 inch held by Bitterberg of Raymond since 1913. Heath of Champaign threw the javelin 183 feet 9 inches, breaking the former record of 171 feet made by Simon of Canton in 1922. Whitlock of Danville on Friday had thrown the javelin 174 feet 4 inches and was picked to carry off the honors, but the Champaign athlete proved a surprise.

Olmstead of Victoria high jumped 5 feet 11⅛ inches for a new interscholastic record. The former record was 5 feet 11 inches, and was the oldest record on the state classic. It was set by Dougherty of Biggsville away back in 1900.

Osborne Fails in Record Try.

Harold Osborne, former Illinois star, and Smith, his old teammate, competed in a special high jump event with designs on the world's record. Osborne cleared 6 feet 6 inches, but failed to break the record of 6 feet 7 5-16 inches. Summaries:

SOCCER TEAMS IN SEMI-FINALS FOR PEEL CUP TODAY

The Olympia team, a former cup holder, will tackle the North Shores of the District league at 35th street and Wentworth avenue. Olympia is favorite, but the North Shore team has been strengthened and may give the west siders a hard battle. Play will start at 3 o'clock.

HALL WINS CLOSE CUE MATCH FROM CAHN IN TOURNEY

Allen Hall, the confident young St. Louis player, had a narrow escape in the Midwest Amateur Three Cushion championship at Mussey's in the second game yesterday afternoon, when he came from behind and defeated Albert Cahn, the Omaha veteran, 50 to 48, in 88 innings. Each had a high run of 6.

It was an even game for thirty-seven innings, and then Hall ran 6 and took the lead. He was in front, 36 to 32, and then Cahn ran 1, 6, and 2.

Later Cahn led, 45 to 39, but Hall counted eleven points in his last ten innings.

In the opening game E. Johnson of the Hamilton club defeated P. J. Edgington of Fort Wayne, 50 to 41, in 104 innings, each having a high run of 4.

In the evening, Forrey added Swanlund to his list of victims, 50 to 34, in 70 innings. The winners high cluster was 4 and the loser's 3. Studebaker brushed Lord aside in the other night encounter, 50 to 32, in 67 sessions. Studebaker accumulated a high streak of 7 and Lord 3.

Hall and Forrey are undefeated. The standing:

MILLICENT'S COUNT WINS FIRST ROUND IN DAVIS CUP PLAY

VIENNA, May 17.—Before a gallery filled with Vienna's loveliest beauties, who had appeared expressly to cheer him, Count Ludwick Salm Von Hoogstraeten, matrimonial buccaneer, won his match against Martin of Switzerland in the Davis cup play today. After the first set Count Ludwick was never in difficulties. Te plays a fair game but his antics on the court furnished great amusement.

Count Ludwick took the court five minutes before his opponent was ready and grandstanded while looking to the women for applause. Before beginning to play he carefully combed his sleek black hair, and repeated the operation twice during the games. Throughout the play the count pulled wise cracks in English or German, and once spoke to the lines umpire, sharply questioning the ball.

He addressed this gentleman, who is a member of Vienna's classiest tennis club, as he would a servant. Count Ludwick beat Martin 6—4, 6—4, 6—2, while his teammate Brück lost to Aeschliman, 6—2, 6—3, and 6—2.

After All - It's the Way You Feel

AFTER all—it's the way you feel about your car.

Mere transportation may be convenient, yet a bore.

Step into the Jordan sales room and take one look at the fascinating Jordan.

There is no use talking—there is something about that automobile—it's different, that's all.

It isn't built for everybody.

Of course, engineers will buy it because they know it's the best built car of its type ever produced in this country.

But it's not so much fun selling to them—

Because that's just a matter of their good judgment.

Of course, people of wealth who are tired of bulky, old fashioned cars, buy it because they know what real quality and economy means.

That's why they have money.

The great thrill comes to the man who not only loves quality and economy, but loves distinction.

He likes to be well dressed and clean cut.

Like an attractive woman possessing inherent charm, the Jordan adds hours of joy to the humdrum of our days.

You can play golf in a suit of overalls if you like, but it's better to be dressed for the game. It's just the way you feel about yourself—and that's the way you feel about the Jordan.

Physical comfort is its dominant mechanical characteristic.

Mental comfort of Jordan owners is the secret of Jordan success.

You can't afford to feel cheap—

You can't endure conspicuous noises—

You simply can't look like everybody else—

You are only going to live about ninety years—why not feel like somebody.

Tourist Service Pays Big Profits to Lakes Gateway

Even the Wily Trout Is Located by Unique Bureau.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—[Special Correspondence.] — Scientific service, the sort that anticipates every possible question of the world's prize interrogation point—the motor tourist—is the unique development completed this year by the Minneapolis Tourist Welcome bureau.

It has reached the point where a moment's glance at orderly files locates every lake and stream in the state, and tells the variety of game fish they hold; lists the best highway routes to those fishing locations; outlines the varieties of tackle and kind of bait best adapted to the waters; catalogs the resorts, camps and like facilities along the way, together with their prices, and approximates the time required to reach them. Each of the scaly battlers is represented in the accurate file—wall eyed pike, great northern pike, sturgeon bass, crappies, sunfish, pickerel, muskellunge, perch, lake trout. And big and small game spots appear in like manner.

Radius files suggest the best trips over any given distance and give minute details of what will be found along the way.

Equipment files show the mechanical and supply facilities along every known road and give estimates of the fair prices on all sorts of trail and camp outfits. All this in addition to accurate highway and trail condition information, license service, shopping guides, weather reports and automobile maintenance suggestions.

This bureau is housed in an attractive town house, near the center of the hotel and shopping district, furnished by the Automobile club of Minneapolis and financed by the city publicity bureau. Its complicated functions are based on simple lines of cooperation and the age old laws of hospitality. It has sold the hospitality idea to more than a half million people in the bustling community and has succeeded in making the stranger a very important part of city life.

The first function of the bureau operates through the police department. Every officer on the Minneapolis force—and the same is true in St. Paul, where a like bureau cares for the tourist—has the protection of out of town automobiles as part of his routine job. He carries books of numbered tags and watches for foreign state licenses. When he spots one he stops the driver and, instead of the usual "bawling out," gives him the official invitation to visit the bureau. The tourist takes the tag to the town house and while he is registering an attendant fastens an attractive visitors' emblem on the car radiator. This automatically opens the hospitality doors of the city to the stranger. The bureau summons is filed and the officer who served it is credited. At the end of the season a score of prizes in cash are given police officers who have served the most visiting cars.

The tourist is then given state, city, and resort maps. If his stay in the state is to be more than ten days' duration, the attendant fills out a visiting license blank for him, entitling him to nonresident privileges for sixty days, all free of charge. If he desires hunting or fishing licenses they are filled out for him, and he is given any specific information he may need during his visit.

License laws are unusually strict in Minnesota and are rigidly enforced. But ten days' stay in the state are allowed without the nonresidence license. Authorities explain that this enforcement is due primarily to the expense attached to state licenses of smaller cars. Until the drag net was ordered, numerous owners were in the habit of running over into Wisconsin or North and South Dakota and buying the cheaper licenses in those states to attach to Minnesota cars. In addition the nonresident applications supply an accurate check on the number of automobile visitors in the state each year and a basis for the entire hospitality system.

With the season opened only a few days ago and snowstorms but a week back, more than 600 visiting cars have already been registered and served by the Minneapolis bureau. Last year some 60,000 cars were registered here alone and plans are laid to care for 80,000 or more this season.

After several years of operation all of the authorities cooperating in this service are convinced that it has paid for itself a hundred times over. It protects both the tourist and local communities, eliminates overcharging, and smooths the way for the most profitable movement of modern times—the automobile vacation.

AT THE DEADLINE

Feeling ran high at the California border when more than 800 tourists were refused admittance to Arizona recently because of the hoof and mouth quarantine. The picture shows a few of them at the interstate bridge at Yuma waiting for the bars to be let down.
[Photograph from Pacific & Atlantic.]

Change Rubber Hose.

Be sure that the rubber hose at top and bottom of radiator is changed at least once a year. The hot water passing through it rots the rubber, which loosens up the fabric, so that it gets in the way of the water, cutting down the efficiency of the cooling system. This is a frequent cause of overheating.

Henry Returns to Early Haunts as Speedway Referee

HENRY FORD, one of America's first automobile racing drivers, now the richest man in the world, will referee the twelfth international 500 mile race to be held at the Indianapolis motor speedway Friday, May 30, it was announced yesterday.

Three of his cars, with the engines rebuilt to conform to the two litre piston content limitations, but basically Ford cars, have been entered as Barber-Warnock specials by an Indianapolis dealer.

A car of this type finished fifth in last year's race.

Henry Ford was a pioneer in the testing of automobiles and engineering principles in competitions. He started driving racing automobiles in 1903. For a decade cars bearing his name were entered in most every event.

On the mile tracks Barney Oldfield won race after race, made a reputation for himself, and became famous for fence busting with the "Ford 999."

Ford, himself, took the "999" out to Baltimore bay beach in Lake St. Clair in Detroit and set a straight away record that stood for some time. Frank Kulick of Detroit, who was head tester for Ford, startled two continents by winning the international on the Empire City track at New York in the fall of 1903. The odds on the flimsy looking twenty horsepower car Kulick was to drive were 20 to 1. In the field that started were many of the foreign cars that had made racing history in America at that time.

Ford then built a special racer that had for a power plant a pair of two cylinder opposed engines hooked together with one flywheel. With this car Kulick set a world's record for five miles, turning the distance in 4:48:4 on Nov. 8, 1904, on the Empire City track.

As referee of the Indianapolis race, Mr. Ford will make final decision on any and all disputes that arise after the start of the race. He alone, as referee, has full power to stop cars, disqualify or reinstate them, and make all decisions.

THANKS TO WILSON

The influence of the late President Wilson is said to have had much to do with the original exclusion of automobiles from Bermuda. When he was a professor in Princeton and a sojourner in Bermuda in the winter of 1908 he drafted the petition to the colonial parliament which resulted in the enactment in April of that year of the present law forbidding the operation or importation of any form of motor vehicle, including motorcycles, in Bermuda.

Safety Pin Helps.

When applying a blowout patch to a tire it is annoying to have the patch slip inside the shoe when placing it on the rim, as it usually means to again remove the shoe and start the work over. A good sized safety pin first fastened to each edge of the patch and heavy rubber band stretched around the outside of the shoe and fastened to the pins will hold the patch tightly while the shoe is replaced.

Hupmobile

Countershaft with Roller Bearings: These bearings are the high-duty roller type, made of chrome nickel steel—the costly, long-wearing metal used in all roller, taper and annular bearings in the Hupmobile. Common practice uses plain bushings at this point. These do not cost as much, but neither are they so durable, by many times, as Hupmobile chrome nickel steel.

Worth Money to You

Facts That May Save You Hundreds Of Dollars On Your Next Car

Here is a transmission countershaft—mounted in high duty roller bearings. No repair expense concealed in that quality Hupmobile construction.

Here is another countershaft. It is mounted in a brass bushing. Eventually it will wear; the bushing will be replaced; the repair bill—the position is difficult of access—will be called exorbitant.

There you have invisible value contrasted with invisible costs.

The Hupmobile Parts Display—on view at our salesroom—enables you to draw these money-saving comparisons, right down the line.

Possessed of these facts, your course is clear.

If any car—no matter what its principle of design may be—no matter what its price—can show parts and processes equal to the Hupmobile and match it in performance, reliability, durability and economy—then, and then only, are you warranted in investing money in the other car.

There are a great many dealers in the United States that are desirous of selling Holland Heating Systems just as they would sell some form of heating apparatus with the usual dividing up of responsibility.

But when you buy your Holland System, you buy directly from the Holland Furnace Company. The Holland Furnace is designed and manufactured by them, the installation is actually done by them, and it is from them—the World's Largest Installers of Furnaces, that you get your Guarantee Bond.

If we were selling just a furnace, it would be possible for us to do business with dealers, just the same as other manufacturers do. For the sake of getting a wide distribution quickly we attempted to sell our product thru dealers when we began business seventeen years ago.

But we soon discovered that it was futile to try to deliver a real Heating Service in this way.

And even after all these years, though we have become the largest installers in the world, we have not yet been able to establish Branches in all of the states.

However, it will not take many years now before your friends from Coast to Coast can have Holland comfort.

And in the meantime, in all our 320 Branches, and in the territories surrounding these branches, we are selling and delivering, a complete Heating Service—not just a Furnace! In hundreds of cities as a result, this Company sells more furnaces than all competitors combined.

A dealer is a dealer, and that is all he can be. He is very useful in many fields—particularly to sell goods that are complete in themselves, when handed over the counter, or delivered at the door.

But a heating engineer is a specialist. Every house that he tackles gives him individual problems. He should thoroughly understand all types of heating. And primarily, he should be a part of a strong organization that is directly responsible to each home-owner for the actual performance of the heating system, and for a long term of years.

Everybody knows what happens when responsibility is divided, and how can you prevent the dividing of responsibility when one company makes a heating system and another (usually a small concern with many side lines) installs that system?

Why Experiment?

Why take chances with the health of the family; with possible injury to the house itself, and the furniture; with fuel expense; and with values on your house that you may some day be interested in.

The Holland Contract and Guarantee Bond positively relieves you of every particle of chance.

Every Holland customer must be pleased. The responsibility is absolutely undivided.

It costs you nothing to investigate fully with regard to your own home. And it puts you under no obligation whatever.

Why not let one of the courteous Holland men tell you the particulars today?

Does your present furnace need a little fixing? If so let a Holland expert take care of it for you at the fair Holland prices.

The Holland is not a pipeless furnace. It is a complete pipe system, with cold air returns from rooms above the basement.

Free Book "The Whole House Comfortable and Clean" is an attractive new book—a guide you should have in furnace buying. Send the coupon to us or get in touch with the nearest Holland Branch today. No matter how many furnaces we make, their installation depends entirely upon the number of trained men available.

The Holland Man in your city will give you valuable information on home heating.

Northwest Opens New Pathways to Virgin Forests

Three Alluring Routes Call Chicago Trail Folk This Year.

BY J. L. JENKINS.

DULUTH, Minn., May 17.—[Special.]—Up here in the land of sky blue waters a new and untouched world lies waiting for the great caravans of city weary cliff dwellers whose van is already winding its way over a thousand roads toward summer adventure in the sparkling northwest.

Here is one frontier at least that is giving way before tourist pioneers now. It offers the sportsmen of today a chance to be the "old timers" of tomorrow. It is not yet cut and dried and overpopulated with summer colonies. Here is solitude and the mystery of unknown leagues within a stone's throw of modern comforts—the true "Min-nee Sotah" of a century past at the end of a 1924 country boulevard!

And this way runs the heaviest trail blaze of the present restless automobile season. Thousands of new faces are going to appear in the great lift of land that flings its lakes and deep woods from the tip of Superior and far Canadian border on the east all the way to the Red river of the north on the west, and dips upward in passing to touch even the lonesome Lake of the Woods beyond the boundary line. They are going to find fresh country for their wandering, new thrills for travel dulled scenes, and new adventures of the long trails. For the country that is big enough to give birth to the Mississippi and St. Lawrence rivers is big enough to take care of the vacation desires for motor pilgrims from all the middle west.

There should be a kick for gasoline alley in the fact that some of the best highways in the northwest cut into and through this same tourist Mecca. A great highway loop, more than half of it concrete, swings north from Duluth dead into the yawning iron range with its northern terminus at Virginia. Concrete runs east from there to Aurora, and a state highway improved with gravel cuts north into the heart of the lovely Vermillion lake district and northeast to Ely. From Virginia north another gravel trunk climbs to the tip of things at International Falls and then twists and winds west with the Rainy river all the way to Roosevelt in the middle of the Lake of the Woods country. Road work will push the improvement on west this summer to connect up with the older gravel at Roseau and the outer loop to Thief River Falls and the northwestern lake country.

The main pavement loop on the range route leads east by south from Virginia through Iron mountain and Hibbing—one of the most attractive tourist controls in this country—and directly into Grand Rapids. A gravel trunk line meets it there and runs back south and east toward Duluth.

Another grand loop of improved roads offers the tourist a swing through virgin country from Grand Rapids west to Bemidji, then north again and east to International Falls. Another drops south from Bemidji through Brainerd and Little Falls, there meeting the concrete into the Twin Cities. Still another makes a swing south from Grand Rapids to Aitkin and east to Carlton and Duluth.

Chicago drivers will find three distinct route options open into this district during the season. One is north through Wisconsin and west through upper Michigan to Superior and Duluth. Another strikes west and north through Rockford, Madison, Baraboo, and La Crosse, across the lower tier of Minnesota counties, and then due north through Minneapolis. A third is the Lincoln highway straight west to the Jefferson highway in Iowa and then due north into vacation land.

All three of these general options will be well worth while this summer but by far the sportiest is the Madison-La Crosse-Minneapolis route. It offers the cream of middle west and northwest scenery, with roads guaranteed to keep the pilot awake every minute of the drive.

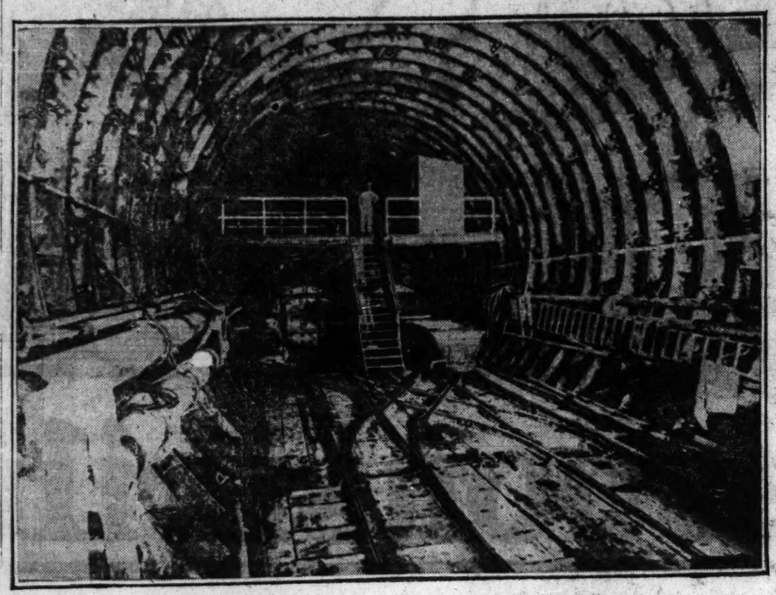
This route starts quietly enough with concrete on the Grant highway to Rockford and pavement and gravel north through Madison to Baraboo. Then it dives west into the middle of Wisconsin hills on state trunk line 33—up, over, around, and through, taking gravel and graded earth roads as they come with a long jump down to La Crosse and the Mississippi. Over the river on Minnesota highway No. 9—a backwoods road brought up to date by the highway department as late as last fall—it clambers over more wild ridges and through canyons unequaled this side of the Rockies. It levels down before reaching Austin, Minn., and there turns north through the prize agricultural belt of the state and into St. Paul. From the cities a direct and heavily traveled trunk line—No. 1—runs to Duluth, but the adventurer may choose one or two more smooth and picturesque routes by way of Mille Lacs or Little Falls.

Remember that on this scenic route there is tough driving over perhaps 10 per cent of the way. Timid tourists should steer clear of the Wisconsin and Minnesota hills, and take the more beaten paths of the other two options if they are looking for safe and easy transportation. But the old timer who appreciates variety in his mileage and knows how to drive a tight rope across narrow ridges, will find this route an endless joy.

The Yellowstone trail north from Chicago through Milwaukee, Fond du Lac, and Appleton offers an easier option for those who want serene going. There the driver may continue west on the Yellowstone into St. Paul and take the main roads north, or he may follow the excellent Wisconsin trunk lines northwest through Rhinelander across the Michigan line to the Roosevelt national highway, and turn west across the iron range to Superior and Duluth. This is the shortest route into the Minnesota lake country. The Roosevelt highway runs on through the pine woods and into the heart of the Minnesota National forest, where Lake Winnibigoshish and trackless wilderness challenges the sportsman and offers every known variety of fish and game in season.

The third general option is also an easy and safe route, with the exception of a few dirt miles in Iowa on the Lincoln highway. It turns north on the Jefferson highway—all gravel—at Colo, and comes north into the Twin Cities via Mason City. At Minneapolis the tourist can choose one of three routes that run north, piercing all three of the northwest reserves, the Roosevelt National, Superior National, and Minnesota National forests.

NOT THE CHICAGO SUBWAY



No, honestly, this isn't a view of Chicago's (maybe) subway. It shows, instead, the vehicular tunnel connecting New York with New Jersey under the Hudson river. The big improvement will add greatly to traffic conveniences during rush hours. It will offer a road right of way about the size of the average traffic street.

Fourth of Traffic in This State Is Strictly Business

THE passenger car usage of the Connecticut highway system is largely for non-business purposes, according to the traffic survey completed by the state highway department in co-operation with the United States bureau of public roads. This condition is revealed by an analysis of the statistics gained by the survey, which shows that 23.5 per cent of the passenger mileage is for business purposes, with 76.5 per cent for non-business usage.

As a result of the survey, sufficient information has been obtained to clearly indicate the major traffic routes, which require constant supervision of construction, maintenance and policing to insure service and safety to traffic.

The greatest density in traffic in Connecticut is between centers of population, production and distribution. Motor truck traffic is a considerably larger proportion of the total traffic on the Boston post road from New Haven to New York City, Hartford, and Springfield than on the lighter transportation highways.

At New Haven the survey shows that 15 per cent of the total traffic is motor truck and 85 per cent passenger car, and at Hartford 10 per cent is motor truck and 90 per cent passenger car.

$20,000,000 May Put Gopher State in Pavement Van

ST. PAUL, Minn.—[Special Correspondence.]—Seven thousand miles of open road make up the state highway system of Minnesota. And an average mile of gravel roadbed on one of the main state routes last year cost exactly $3,001 in maintenance and repair.

That excessive maintenance charge on the heavily used trunk lines where gravel is the major type of surfacing, coupled with the lack of immediate funds for a statewide paving program, forms the chief objection to a working plan that has made Minnesota one of the most popular touring and motor transportation states in the union, according to members of the state highway commission.

Roads of this northwest empire have been forcibly dragged from the mud through the use of the state's natural gravel resources and the genius and determination of Commissioner C. M. Babcock, rather than through the application of modern highway financing methods, say students of the national road plans. Traffic has been served for the most part by local road levies which swell the tax burden on Minnesota land and by a sort of half way bond issue which gives the counties the initiative in issuing bonds which state funds are slow paying off.

About $35,000,000 of such county bonds have been issued and the counties which took the good roads step are now being reimbursed from license fee funds. Another issue of $20,000,000 is now up to the state legislature, and sentiment all over the state seems to promise it success this year.

If the issue passes the highway department is prepared to clear away the worst of existing highway barriers in a single gesture and gallop into a construction campaign which will set new standards in wider terminal roads and modern paving improvements for the country.

It is possible that No. 1 trunk line, the main traffic road running from St. Paul all the way north to Duluth, will be closed from end to end for construction as the result of the promised bond issue, and all traffic detoured during the construction work. This road is the most expensive of the state's gravel arteries. It carried a huge freight and passenger tonnage daily and is one of the primary tourist routes in the fishing and hunting seasons.

At present the iron range counties and sparsely settled districts to the north may be credited with the state's paving championship. Like the isolated north counties in Wisconsin and Michigan, these communities were first to grasp the importance of modern road improvements. As a result, hundreds of miles of concrete pavements loop their way from Duluth through the northern lake country. Other pavements now center about the Twin cities, one of the longest continuous stretches running from Minneapolis to St. Cloud on the north.

It is possible this year to drive from Duluth along the northern shores of Lake Superior clear to Pigeon river on a good gravel road. Another good automobile road runs from Grand Marais to Hungry Jack lake, and a new road is going in to Gunflint lake on the far north.

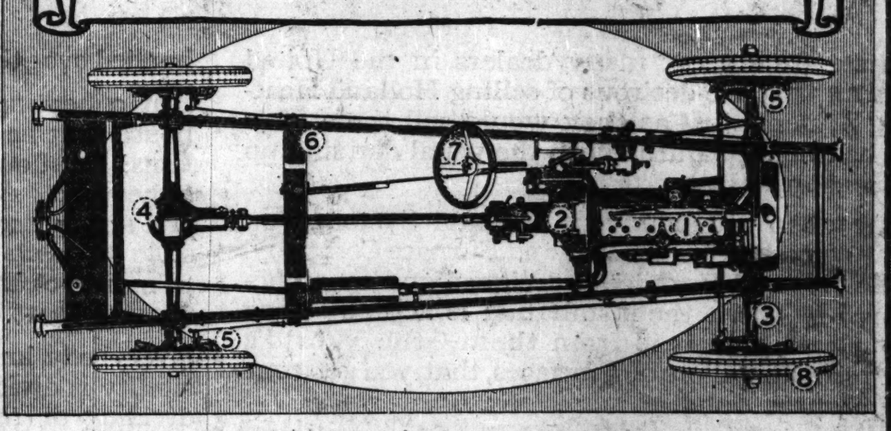
STUDEBAKER LIGHT-SIX - $1045

Why Oakland's Chassis is more advanced



Nothing has been spared in effort or money to make this the finest of light sixes

(1) Oakland's new L-head engine is a masterpiece of light-six engineering. Compact, powerful, smooth, economical and long lived, it incorporates the very latest developments in motor design.

(2) The transmission is a unit with the engine. Gears of the finest alloy steel and liberal ball bearings, insure quiet and long life. The single-plate disc clutch is remarkably smooth operating. Gear shifting is actually a pleasure.

(3) The rugged, drop-forged, "I" beam front axle was purposely designed for this car. Its correct construction insures easy steering and safe driving. Compare it with the axles on even larger cars.

(4) Oakland's semi-floating rear axle is the last word in axle design. Its nickel steel gears, Hyatt and New Departure bearings and spiral bevel gear drive make a silent and efficient combination. All its units are readily accessible.

(5) Oakland's four-wheel brakes are built into the chassis. Many months of service by tens of thousands of owners prove conclusively that this construction is most necessary and desirable. There is, in addition, a powerful parking brake on the transmission.

(6) Oakland's frame is extra strong. It is of pressed steel, 5-32 of an inch thick, and is rigidly braced with five cross members. In comparing frames, do not neglect the fact that the thickness of the steel is just as important as the depth or width.

(7) The steering gear is unequalled for easy handling and convenient driving. All engine controls, as well as horn button and lighting controls, are mounted on the steering wheel. This is an exclusive Oakland feature.

(8) Demountable disc steel wheels—five of them—are standard equipment on all models. They are safer, neater, more convenient. On most cars you pay extra for them.

Long, easy-riding springs; Harrison radiator with heavily nickeled shell; completely enclosed universal joints and tubular drive shaft are other important features.

The north woods country of Wisconsin with its 7,0 00 lakes and Minnesota with its 10,000 lakes—sparkling little interruptions of the forest—is a wonderful hold ay land. Read Mr. Jenkins' interesting article on Minnee Sotah and what this great state offers the sports men of today. Engineers Form New Rules for Auto Brake Tests

NEW YORK, May 17.—A study of state laws regulating automobile brakes shows that no uniformity of requirements exists, says a report compiled by the American Engineering Standards committee, which has asked the American Automobile association, the bureau of standards, department of commerce, and the Society of Automotive Engineers to act as joint sponsors for a safety code on automobile brakes and brake testing.

The present brake inspection campaigns now being conducted in New York, Detroit, and New Orleans, as well as scores of other communities, have attracted the attention of the engineers, who are drafting a code which is expected to adequately fulfill the need for a rational and dependable basis for the establishment of brake regulations that will be standard and applicable to all conditions. There is no doubt but what more states, cities, and towns will pass ordinances relative to brake performance and inspection. The code that is now planned should accomplish much toward unifying laws that are being passed and toward obtaining, not more laws, but more reasonable ones.

During the past two weeks the New York police have greatly increased their force of inspectors of automobiles and have tested thousands of cars to ascertain which ones had had brakes and also in the hope of locating stolen motor vehicles. This campaign has resulted in protests by owners of second hand machines and by people whose cars had defective apparatus. The majority of the people of New York City, however, are loud in their praises of the work that has been done by the department of public safety. The annual Safety parade, which was held today, was witnessed by hunderds of thousands of people.

Safety Week is now being observed at Detroit, Mich., where the police are checking up the brakes on passenger cars and trucks.

Conserve Scrap.

The scrap pile about the garage and shop often proves a source of income that amounts to considerable during the year. Many parts may be converted with a little additional labor. Bolts and studs are an example; those with poor threads can be shortened and rethreaded, when the heads are damaged they can be removed and the bolt converted into a stud. Drive shafts are of such material that they can readily be converted into crowbars and also used for making other small parts. A little thought will readily show the various parts would prove profitable when salvaged. This is also true of old tools which may be converted for many uses and sometimes sold to owners who do their own repair work.

Read Here Legend of Big Blue Ox and Little Lakes

DON HOUGH of the Minnesota Resorts association has discovered to his own entire satisfaction the romantic origin of all the myriad lakes that dapple the northwest.

Years and years ago, we will solemnly tell you, a giant lumber jack buried himself in clearing away rifts in the primeval forest all across this northern sweep of land.

He drove a blue ox whose constant companion was a coal black crow, perched comfortably on the tip of the left horn. One day the crow decided to change horns and flew an entire day and well into the night before it reached the right perch!

It seems, according to Hough's story, that the lumber jack camped one night over by the Red river, but found that his ox didn't like the water. He sent his water boy—another lad of considerable proportions—over to Lake Superior for a supply. Somehow the boy missed Superior in his hurry and stepped over to Lake Michigan, where he filled his bucket, lowering the lake level by about six inches. The bucket leaked in several places and slopped over a bit on the return trip. Hence those northern lakes.

Quick "Get Away"
5 to 25 miles an hour in 7⅞ seconds
~ 2 to 60 miles in high

Here's a car that creeps through crowded traffic at a bare 2 miles an hour—in high! That leaps ahead from 5 to 25 miles an hour in 7⅞ seconds—without tiresome gear shifting. That steps smoothly up to a mile-a-minute gait when you want to let it out.

It is this unmatched flexibility that carries the Gardner out in front when the traffic officer signals "Go!" That enables it to shoot past other cars in the emergencies you meet every day on the country roads. To gain speed on steep grades where other cars falter and shift to second half-way up.

The reason? The famous five-bearing crankshaft Gardner motor with its 67 inches of bearing surface. Those extra bearings hold the crankshaft in line and provide the support necessary to withstand the downward thrust of the pistons. They provide a smooth flow of power for any need or any emergency.

The Gardner story is one of outstanding performance. Hence no casual inspection can reveal all the advantages Gardner has to offer you. So we say ask us for the proof—a demonstration on the road. Drive a Gardner car for half an hour—or half a day. And judge the car by what it does.

Road conditions forced the use of chains for 1,396 miles of the trip. Yet the Gardner covered the entire 3,392 miles at an average speed only four miles an hour less than is possible with the most direct railroad connections and fastest trains.

Uncle Sam Ready to Blaze Trails Into Playgrounds

$7,500,000 for National Parks Roads to Aid Tourists.

MOTORISTS planning to visit any of the nineteen national parks or the twenty-nine national monuments this season will be interested to learn that congress has just passed a bill authorizing an appropriation of $7,500,000 for road building in our national playgrounds during the next three years. This is the measure which had the active support of the American Automobile association.

According to Senator Lawrence C. Phipps of Colorado this improvement in the national park highways is urgently needed. Since 1916, it is pointed out, the states with federal aid have expended $23,828,800 in building approach roads to the national parks, but the roads within the park borders are said to be inadequate in every way.

The great interest manifested in the national parks as a result of improving the roads approaching them was told by Senator Phipps when he said:

"During 1914 about 10,000 automobiles were registered in the parks, and in 1923 about 300,000. The admissions to parks and monuments last season totaled nearly 1,500,000 visitors. The total mileage of roadways is 1,060, on which the federal government has spent $3,504,100 in all since 1872, when the first para was opened.

"Federal appropriations in aid of states and for forest roads since 1916 amount to $592,000,000. During the same period only $1,443,600 was expended for park roads, while the government collected $1,511,233 as fees from automobiles using the parks, of which $385,687 was collected during 1923. During the above period, the states with federal aid have expended $23,828,800 in building approach roads to the national parks."

Commenting upon the Colorado senator's address and the bill just passed by congress, Thomas P. Henry, president of the American Automobile association, said that owing to increased touring facilities of affiliated auto clubs national park visitors will find greatly improved service at every point of their motor tour, and that this service combined with the general betterment in highway conditions throughout the country will render the roads within the park bounds of secondary consideration.

Whether a motorist plans to inspect one of these great examples of the true America this year or later he should be familiar with the situation regarding the highways, he said:

"For instance, it is not possible now to drive your car across the Glacier National park," Mr. Henry said. "It must be shipped by train from one side of the Rockies to the other or be driven south several hundred miles to a pass through which the state has built a road. Or one must drive around north of the Canadian National park at Banff in the Canadian Rockies. A road should be built at once across the Glacier park.

"In the case of Mount Ranier, there are only thirty miles of highway available for motor travel. This is not enough mileage to offer a motorist after he has driven all the way to Puget sound to see the great mountain with its wild flower gardens, its forests and its glaciers.

"New roads would greatly enlarge the opportunity of the visitor to see the Grand canyon country. In Rocky Mountain park, where a road ascends to the crest of the Rockies at an altitude of over 11,000 feet, the highway is located in a place where snow drifts early in the fall and where it lies in the spring until blasted out with T-N-T. This road should be relocated."

Save the Hat

From the felt of an old hat washers may be made for packing the stuffing boxes of the water pump. These are made more effective if the felt has been boiled in a mixture of tallow and plumbago.

The Inquiring Reporter

He's Out to Learn the Truth About Motordom.

The Tribune will pay $5 for each question accepted for the Inquiring Reporter to ask. Send name and address with your question to "The Inquiring Reporter," Chicago Tribune. For today's question Miss Clara Salle, 1014 North State street, was awarded $5.

The Question.

Would you like to drive an auto at the Indianapolis races?

Where Asked.

Grant Park garage, foot of Van Buren street.

The Answers.

Al E. Briedis, 6230 South Rockwell street, musician—Having participated in a race at Kalamazoo, Mich., last summer, I'm here to say it's a wonderful sensation. It's worth the danger involved. To sit back of the wheel of a high power car and hear the purr of the motor and the cheers of the crowd—that's some tonic.

Martin Yoerke, 827 West 34th place, chauffeur — I don't know about that, but I like fast driving. I'd like to go 100 miles an hour—but not on the roads we have in Illinois, or anywhere, for that matter. I am not as interested in the track at a race course as I am in the roads the public travels over.

Joseph N. Adams, 3300 Union street, chauffeur — Like Mr. Yorke, here, I like fast driving. I've gone as high as seventy miles; I'd like to clip up to 100, or break the limit. Give me a wide open road, a fast car, and all the cops asleep—give me the Fool's highway.

T. L. Cundiff, 4925 Sheridan road, soda dispenser—If some one will present me with a racing car I'll guarantee to do my darndest on the track at Indianapolis. I could try, sure I could try. See what a car I'd have to drive back to Chicago in. Anyhow, I'd like to see the races.

William L. Parker, 1405 Rascher avenue, advertising—Why, certainly. I'd be liable to get my neck broken, but what's the difference. This is an age of speed, and young fellows like all the speed they can get. I don't know of a better place for speed than at the wheel of an auto on the Indianapolis track.

Visible Coppers to Spread Safety Over Boulevards

DR. JOHN DILL ROBERTSON, new president of the West Park board, announced at a recent meeting of the board that he wanted the motorcycle policemen employed by the board to patrol the streets to reduce the speed of motor vehicles instead of lying in wait in side streets to arrest occasional speeders.

A request that such action be taken was recently made of Chief of Police Collins and the presidents of the three principal park boards by L. B. Southerland, chairman of the safety committee of the Chicago Automobile Trade association. Chief Collins announced that the city motorcycle policemen would be so instructed, and now the West Park board has taken similar action.

President Edward J. Kelly of the South Park board has notified Mr. Southerland that the matter is now being considered by his organization, but nothing has been heard from the Lincoln Park board. The trade association takes the position that all traffic moves more slowly and safely when a motorcycle policeman is visible and that safety will be promoted more effectively by slowing down all traffic rather than through occasional arrests for speeding.

Banner Year.

A banner year in motor vehicle use is in prospect in the opinion of officials of the bureau of public roads, who announced that the year opened with 15,092,197 machines registered, an increase of 2,853,302 over the number at the beginning of 1923. California, New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania each had more than 1,000,000 machines.

Motor truck registrations totaled more than 1,500,000 with New York, Ohio and Illinois each having more than 100,000 each.

DORT SIX

DORT SIX BREAKS AND MAKES ANOTHER RECORD

On the night of April 25th the non-stop road record between New York and Washington was broken.

The man who broke it was David S. Hendricks.

The car he drove was the 1924 Dort Six Touring.

The old record was seven hours twenty-five minutes.

The new Dort record is seven hours eleven minutes.

The old record was made on dry roads.

The new Dort record was made over wet roads and through driving rain two-thirds of the way.

The total distance, 240 miles.

The average speed, 33⅓ miles per hour.

The old record was made by a car selling for twice the price of the Dort.

Not race track speed—but steady, plugging hour-in, hour-out running. Off the ferry and into Jersey City in the wind and rain at eight minutes before midnight. Across the broad, level fields of New Jersey, through its sleeping towns and cities. Into Philadelphia and out again, turning south along Delaware Bay. Through Wilmington and out into the hills of Maryland. Into Baltimore with the first gray of the dawn and the last stretch of the race. Drawn up before the Municipal Building in the center of Washington at three minutes after seven in the morning. Across five states, through wind and rain, to prove again Dort reliability.

FARM AND GARDEN

Northwest Seeks Protective Tariff on Dairy Products

Tumble in Price Leaves Them No Profit, the Farmers Claim.

BY FRANK RIDGWAY.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 17.—[Special.]—Northwestern farmers believe that enthusiasts, including business men and agriculturalists, have made too much fuss over the dairy cow. The thing has been overdone by well meaning people, according to their views, causing so many dairy products to pile up in America that prices have taken a tumble.

For three or four years the milk cow has been boosted to the moon. She has been welcome in almost every lot in the land. Boosters have gone into successful dairying sections and come out with fairylike stories of the dairy cow. They have pictured cow paths winding through pastures where contented bossies wade knee deep in clover, farms with big barns and silos, homes electrically lighted, and farmers with bank books showing long columns of figures. Bossy has been the most popular actor in the agricultural drama and crowned queen of many other lands, including Denmark, New Zealand, Australia, Argentine, and Canada. But she is apparently being forced to come down off the throne, and dairymen fear her wares may soon sell on a level with other farm products.

Market experts claim that the dairy industry has expanded to the point where gross domestic production, in terms of whole milk, slightly exceeds gross domestic consumption. The millions of pounds of cheese, butter, and condensed milk that are being shipped in from other countries make the straw that's breaking the camel's back.

Prices Fall Off.

Last year the Minnesota farmers' income from butter fat was 33 per cent more than it was in 1913. At the present time dairymen figure they are getting only about 25 per cent more than they did in 1913. But the favorable relation that existed in 1923 does not exist now, experts say. Last month, for example, butter fat prices in Minnesota were lower than they were last June. June is the low month, while April prices are usually good. Farmers were 38.4 cents a pound for butter fat last month, while a year ago they got 48 cents. The difference of about 10 cents is the whole profit in the dairy game, farmers claim. It costs just as much to produce this year as it did last, and they are getting about one-fourth less for their products. That ill the reason many here in Minnesota are going to look for some other business if dairy products continue to fall off.

There are 100,000 dairy farmers backing John Brandt, head of the Minnesota Coöperative Creamery association, when he went to Washington the other day to ask for an increase in the tariff on dairy products to protect American producers against foreign competition. The 6,100 members of the Twin City Milk Producers' association, which sells 80 per cent of the fluid milk in St. Paul and Minneapolis, are also back of the campaigners, who are seeking a protective tariff on dairy products.

Dairying Hard Work.

W. S. Moscript, secretary of the producers' organization, says "with thirteen foreign countries now dumping their products on the American market there can be no argument from free traders or protectionists on the necessity, advisability, or expediency of immediate action to protect America's greatest industry by adequate tariffs."

"There are only a few farmers who actually like dairying," H. R. Leonard, manager of the Twin City Producers' association, says. "Circumstances have forced them into milking cows and the reason they have been making money is because the whole family works from twelve to fourteen hours a day 365 days in the year. The wheat raisers and beef cattle producers have periods in the year when they have little to do."

It has been figured out that dairy farmers got less than 10 cents an hour for their labor in 1911, jumping up to 35 cents an hour in 1920, and dropped back to 30 cents last year. There has been a drop this year, cutting their earnings down to less than 20 cents an hour during April. It will be about the same this month as it was last.

Balance Domestic Production.

Seventy-five per cent of the blame for the slump in prices of dairy products should be put on increased production at home, instead of charging all of the present ills to foreign competition resulting from inadequate tariff, is the belief of W. L. Cavert of the University of Minnesota.

"An increase in the tariff on foreign cheese, butter, and condensed milk may not improve price conditions as much as we might think if our domestic production continues to increase, because we are already producing about as much as we consume," Mr. Cavert said. "Tariff may help a little in this way: New Zealand, Australia, and other southern hemisphere countries have a flush season when we have a slump in production, so that the tariff might benefit American dairymen in winter but probably little in summer, if we assume that a fairly close balance in domestic production and consumption continues."

There are a variety of opinions on the dairy farmer's present situation and the need for a tariff among leaders up here. Harry N. Owen, editor of the Farm, Stock, and Home, says that prices of dairy products are on the downgrade, but not because farmers in this country are producing too much. They have a long way to go before they reach the danger point in production, he thinks, but "unless we can be protected and a profitable price for dairy products can be maintained, the outlook for the northwest is indeed dark."

Time for Caution.

Mr. Cavert agrees that the future for the northwest would be unpromising if farmers stake everything on the production of dairy products, but there are other things being grown in abundance in this territory, he added.

The university in this state does not advocate a general switch to dairying. Experts at the agricultural college believe a certain number of farmers with families can afford to milk from five to ten cows and make a profit, but men on large farms who would have to add more hired help if they started a dairy herd might not find dairying profitable, especially if they have not had experience.

Andrew Boss at the university says: "It is time to exercise caution in the dairy business. Farmers in favorable localities who are already equipped should continued probably in dairy production. Others whose location and resources naturally favor the dairy business may well proceed to grow into it. It looks like a poor time, however, to buy into the business or attempt to develop dairying in localities not naturally favorable to the industry."

DOWN ON THE FARM

[By United.]

ALARM CLOCK JINGLE IS SUBSTITUTE FOR BOSSY'S MOO IN CALLING CALF.—It's corn planting time in Iowa, and Robert Ralph of Wall Lake doesn't have time to feed his pet calf, so he has rigged up this automatic feeding device. The alarm clock goes off at feeding time, the calf comes a runnin', and by the time he gets there the bell's clapper has released a ball which opens a chute, letting grain slide from the hopper to the feed trough below. Winding the clock and filling the hopper is all Robert has to do. The calf does the rest.

Hoosiers Favor Truck for Going to Market

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—[Special.]—Hard surfaced roads and the improvement of highways generally have put farmers in Indiana many miles closer to the Indianapolis live stock market. Approximately 71,000 truckloads of live stock, including hogs, cattle, and sheep, were hauled to the Indianapolis stock yards last year, according to the records of the exchange here.

using the truck about ten or eleven years ago. The rapid increase in its use for hauling live stock to the Indianapolis market is indicated by the following figures copied direct from the auditor's records of the number of hogs hauled in trucks since 1913:

1915	136,447	1921	808,595
1916	173,191	1922	734,280
1917	271,994	1923	934,960
1918	462,813

The state farm bureau in Indiana has established a coöperative feed and fertilizer buying agency at the Indianapolis stockyards so that trucks may be loaded on the return haul. In this way costs of transporting live stock will be cut.

Successful Home Gardener Mixes Brain with Brawn

LINE up all the gardeners you can think of whose results in the garden put them above the rank and file of growers and you will find they always mix brains with brawn in gardening. In their gardens are grown big red tomatoes, crisp, sweet heads of lettuce, and vines loaded with beans and peas.

Not only is it necessary to plan the garden intelligently and select the varieties that do best in your particular locality but it is necessary to do a little thinking as long as the plants are in the ground. Every garden has peculiarities of its own and no book or bulletin on gardening, no matter how complete, will guide you over every circumstance that arises.

No Excuse for Failures.

Crop failures in vegetable gardens, especially in towns and cities where there is plenty of water, are usually preventable. With the modern methods of protecting plants from droughts, frosts, and bugs the failures nowadays are usually due to ignorance or because the gardener is not interested.

There is no excuse for gardeners to go along year after year producing coarse, woody, pithy vegetables that are tasteless and worthless, and continuing with antiquated methods that were discarded by progressive truckers years ago. They are the ones who have shabby looking gardens in midsummer and they are the ones who become discouraged first and blame all their failures on the weather or soil or the vareity they planted.

Easy to Keep Posted.

Gardeners in this country have a chance to become the greatest vegetable growers in the world. During the winter they have the time and opportunity to read books, magazines, and articles of various kinds dealing with the latest developments in gardening methods in America; besides, most home gardeners have a chance to study at first hand the best methods used by truckers who have come here from every nation on the globe. These ideas are not only of value to the amateur but they are helpful to experienced growers. There is an excellent opportunity for gardeners in big cities to pick up ideas from truckers of various nationalities nearby who use intensive methods that have stood the tests in their native countries.

Back lotters could run their plots much more intelligently by adapting some of these methods. Novices should spend several hours with some veteran trucker. These men are able to give many practical tips that are not to be found in books and bulletins. They know from experience the kinds and varieties that grow best in the locality.

By using high grade seeds of the improved varieties and by following approved methods of cultivating, watering, and controlling pests, there is not a green grocer or huckster in town who can compete with home gardeners when it comes to quality vegetables. The man who buys vegetables on the market may have all the money in the world, but it will not bring to his door the fresh, high quality products that can be gathered daily from the home garden.

Good vegetables cannot be grown unless they are furnished the right kind of conditions and eyed closely from the time the seeds are planted until the crop is harvested. There is plenty of work to do in a garden but it is not tiresome if the grower is really interested.

A gardener who has been in the business for more than thirty years says that wherever weeds will grow rank and vigorously that is the spot for vegetables. That is good advice for the farmer and perhaps the gardener who lives at the edge of town where land is plentiful, but the city gardener usually has to plant vegetables on the tiny plot that is left after the house and garage are built.

Trees Bad for Crops.

Trying to grow vegetables near big trees, particularly maples and oaks, is often discouraging. Big roots of such trees steal the plant food and moisture, besides shading the crops.

This is the time of year that amateurs make a lot of mistakes—mistakes that often cannot be remedied even if they work hard all summer. They frequently spade up the ground too early while it is wet and then spend the entire summer juggling clods with the hoe and rake.

A test commonly used is to turn over a spadeful of soil, squeeze a handful of the earth while it is fresh, and if it sticks together and is so moist that water stands on the ball of soil, leaving the imprints of the hand, it is too wet to be spaded or plowed.

GARDEN NOTES

City gardeners who have some spare ground should plant Hubbard squash seed. Hubbard squashes can be stored in basements where there is a furnace. They will keep in almost any dry place where it is not too cold.

In the central counties of Indiana many Hoosier farmers are going in for grapes. Since the price of this beverage fruit has gone up, these farmers say they believe they can make more money producing grapes for the market on the thin knolls of their land than they can by growing corn and oats. In a recent tour through that section of the state several new vineyards, set out during the last year or two, were seen.

If you haven't tried New Zealand spinach, plant some this spring and see if it will produce a decent crop in your locality.

If you use fertilizer on your soil, remember that quick acting fertilizers, like nitrate of soda and wood ashes, are usually applied as a top dressing to the growing crops.

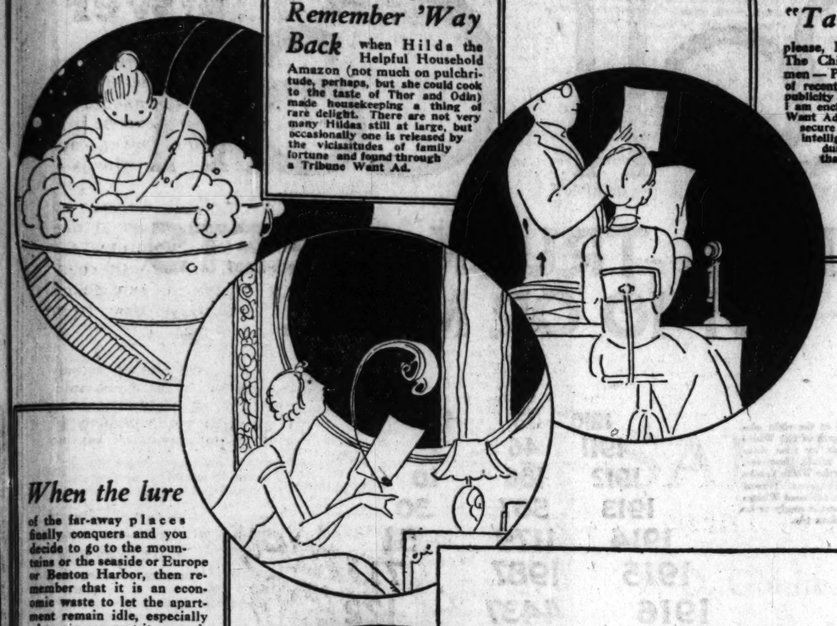
When in Want, Use a Want Ad!

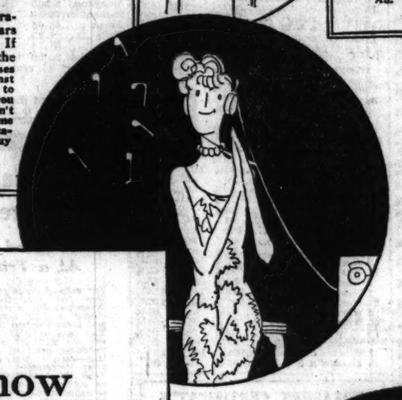


Remember 'Way Back when Hilda the Helpful Household Amazon (not much on pulchritude, perhaps, but she could cook to the taste of Thor and Odin) made housekeeping a thing of rare delight. There are not very many Hildas still at large, but occasionally one is released by the vicissitudes of family fortune and found through a Tribune Want Ad.

"Take a letter, please, Miss Happlewhite. . . . The Chicago Tribune, Gentlemen—Pursuant to suggestions of recent date, embodied in your publicity pages of polite persiflage, I am enclosing order for a Tribune Want Ad which will enable me to secure a bookkeeper of superior intelligence and undoubted industry. Knowing as I do that preferred workers read The Tribune, I have not sent this ad to any other paper. The Tribune will be sufficient. Very truly yours, I. M. Wise."

Meet Mr. Scroggins, the green-grocer of Threadneedle St., about whom the only thing green is the groceries. Like many of us who came over late, but under most respectable auspices, he is being handed the social raspberries by the offspring of the Old Timers. But Mr. Scroggins has found that the dollar is very democratic, and he has met and detained quite a few of them. By the way, he bought his little store through a Tribune Want Ad.

"Feasts are Hateful things," remarked Mr. Q. Horatius Flaccus, 2,000 odd years ago, only he said it in Latin. If you, too, dear reader, share the old reprobate's aversion to the uses of formality, there is no law against getting all dressed up to listen to a Radio Concert—providing you have a Radio—and if you haven't one, get one through The Tribune Want Ad Section where perspicacious people sell a small set to buy a larger one.



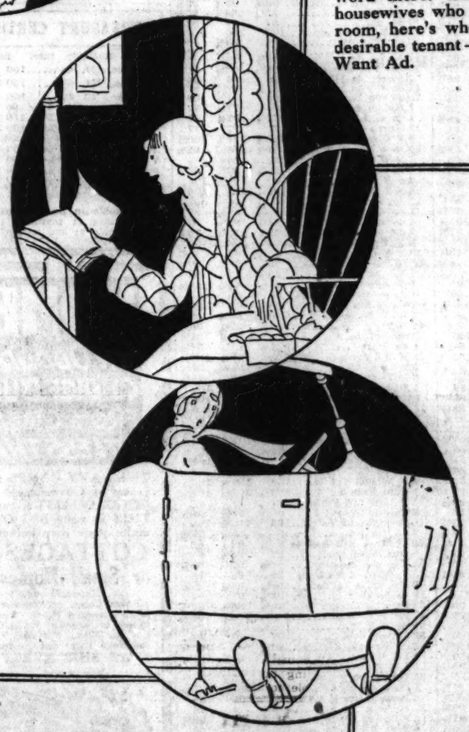
"—Were Happiness Enow." A book of Sabatini, a box of chocolates and a quiet room would, we venture to say, be Omar's formula of happiness, had he the misfortune of being alive today. Both Sabatini and the chocolates are products well advertised in our display columns, and a good room, clean and quiet, can be found in the Want Ads. Just one word more. Landladies and housewives who have a spare room, here's where to find a desirable tenant—Tribune Want Ad.

When the lure of the far-away places finally conquers and you decide to go to the mountains or the seaside or Europe or Boston Harbor, then remember that it is an economic waste to let the apartment remain idle, especially when you can rent it so readily with a Tribune Want Ad. Merely call Central 0100 and ask for an Adtaker.

A Well-Known connoisseur of rare and ancient fabrics is the gentleman we picture above. But unless your fabrics are very ancient it were better not to sell to him, for after all, he has the professional collector's interest in pecuniary returns, which always detracts from Art. Garments that are still quite good, but a little behind the mode, can be sold much more advantageously through a Tribune Want Ad.

"Rejoice with Me for I have found the groat which was lost." Thus goes the old Bible story which, no doubt, you, too, dear reader, have listened to many times during a pious youth. But in the eternal cycle of things the modern young woman is much more likely to lose a handbag or a vanity box. "But rejoice with me, nevertheless, for I found it by inserting a Want Ad in The Tribune."

"Is There no Balm in Gilead?" gesticulated Grover Grosvenor grammatically as he grabbed the granulated socket wrench to fix the what-not on the flying bizinkus of his petulant petrol buggy. But had he known that the race is not always to the swift, had he bought his car from a reliable used car dealer who advertises in The Tribune's Want Ad Section, he would not now be invoking the minor deities of ill-luck!



"Just Mindin' My biz—ness and goin' along—" Mesdames, you can keep the wandering male home nights (whether he be brother, husband or son) by presenting him with a stout-throated cornet or saxophone. People who have musical instruments for sale find ready takers for them through Tribune Want Ads.

How Doth the Busy fisherman improve each shining hour? By fishing, of course, and thereby storing up pep in the form of white and red corpuscles, vitamins and what-not in a vigorous constitution whose energies during the rest of the year he will turn into shekels which will forfend the well known wolf from his family portal. Resort owners, attention. He bought his summer cottage through a Tribune Want Ad.

"Oh, That We Two were Maying." But really, you know, one does not go a-Maying without the correct outfit which consists of a camera, a canteen and hiking togs. People who no longer need them, sell cameras and canteens, as well as all kinds of sport paraphernalia, through Tribune Want Ads.

If Peevish Pol has regrettable propensities to profane language acquired through the usual maritime associations, he is certainly not a fit companion for the more reticent sex. Sell him back to a sailor. Lots of poor sailors in Belmont Harbor never get any nearer to the coral strands of Indie than St. Joe, Mich., and must purchase their parrots locally. Tribune Want Ads find good homes for dogs, cats, monkeys and all other manner of pets.

When they moved into the new house, Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Wilkinson found that the gas range was not what it might be. At times, like the bright orb of day, it glowed too fiercely warm and burnt the apple sauce as well as the layer-cake. You are precisely right; they sold it and bought another stove, inexpensively, through a Tribune Want Ad (Household Goods).

HAVE you ever considered in how many ways Tribune Want Ads can help you? Turn to the Want Ad Section in today's Tribune and look over the different kinds of Want Ads that appear there. Thousands of advertisers sell Real Estate, Automobiles, Businesses, Furniture, Musical Instruments, and thousands of readers are helped by finding these articles at a cost less than they could buy them elsewhere.

Now consider how these Want Ads can help you to turn the things you no longer need into cash with which to purchase what you do need. Or they will put you in touch with an employe, or a maid, or a job, or an apartment.

The Sunday Tribune's Want Ad Section was never a better result-producing medium than it is today. With its enormous circulation of 950,000 copies and its hundreds of thousands of readers throughout the five-state area, every Want Ad works harder for its advertiser than ever before. Start using Want Ads now.

Market for hogs closed on a firm basis last week as offerings at practically all leading centers continued to decrease with Saturday's arrivals at only 4,000, making last week's receipts at Chicago smallest in over eighteen months and several thousand below the ten year average for the first time in over a year, being generally considered the turning point for smaller future supplies, comparing with corresponding periods a year ago.

Week end business was transacted largely on a steady to strong basis, with light up largely 5@10c, the latter selling upwards to the day's top price for the first time in several weeks. The day's top and average prices were unchanged at $7.65 and $7.50 respectively, being 25c above opening day last week and comparing with a top of $7.60 and average of $7.40 the previous Saturday.

Hog Receipts Smaller.

Hog receipts last week at 144,200 were smallest since October, 1922, being 25,300 below arrivals previous week, 29,800 smaller than a year ago, and 4,700 below the ten year average. Estimated average weight of hogs at 236 lbs equaled previous week, being 4 lbs lighter than a year ago, 7 lbs lighter than two years ago, and 2 lbs above the ten year average. Average price at $7.30 equaled the lowest week's average since first week in March, being 15c below previous week, 40c under a year ago, and $4.80 below the ten year average.

Starting last week with second largest day's cattle receipts of the year at 24,852, the market opened 15@40c lower, but dwindling supplies balance of week forced a reaction, and practically all the decline was regained, with some kinds above previous Saturday at the finish. Offerings graded poorer in quality than previous week, and nothing sold above $11.90, while some 1,290 lb fat steers sold to go back to the country for a "short feed" at $10.85. Fancy 808 lb heifers sold up to $11.10. Week's average price of good beef steers $9.65, against $9.80 previous week.

Sheep Receipts Small.

With sheep receipts among the smallest since last summer and the Colorado season at a close, together with the fact that the native spring lamb crop is unusually late, lamb market closed on a firm basis, in spite of reported surplus of dressed lamb and mutton at some eastern points late last week. Local lamb values were within 10@15c of the high point this year and generally steady with a week ago.

After a strong opening last week, aged sheep values, due to liberal Texas "directs," weakened and closed in a top-heavy condition, although offerings on sale were too few to cause any sharp breaks late. Top wool lambs for the week rested at $17.25, with shorn at $15.50. Wool ewes reached $9.25 and shorn $8.65.

Receipts for Monday are estimated at 22,000 cattle, 54,000 hogs, and 16,000 sheep, against 24,352 cattle, 66,517 hogs, and 16,716 sheep a week ago, and 18,-105 cattle, 58,438 hogs, and 14,147 sheep the corresponding day a year ago. Next week's receipts are estimated at 54,000 cattle, 155,000 hogs, and 57,000 sheep, against 64,799 cattle, 179,023 hogs, and 62,949 sheep a year ago.

COTTON PRICES LOWER

NEW YORK, May 17.—COTTON—Prices after a good break, rallied fairly and finished with losses of 18@36 points. Week-end liquidation and local selling, due to improved weather combined with a weak technical position, due to recent heavy covering by shorts, were the leading features. Reports from the dry goods section were of a light business in cotton goods and lower prices for spot cotton in the Carolinas and in south generally tended to weaken confidence of holders. The subject of taxation is the most pressing major subject before the American people today. Excessive taxation, ill-balanced taxation and duplicate taxation have brought this subject to the attention of everyone who has investments, or who will leave an estate of $5,000 or more.

Increase Your Estate by Decreasing Your Taxes

Every Estate is Affected —Some More Than Others

Estates of all sizes are directly affected by Inheritance Taxation. The degree depends upon the size of the estate—the securities—the relationship of heirs to decedent—the residence of decedent and other factors.

One estate would have saved $29,000 by the simple exchange of two equal sized bequests.

Another was taxed in 19 different States.

It is not uncommon for securities to be sold at forced sale to pay Inheritance Taxes. (The Woolworth Building was sold for that purpose).

Prompt settlement of your estate will be dependent upon your foresight regarding Inheritance Taxes.

Consideration for your heirs calls upon you to shape your estate so it will be least affected.

DEEP in his heart, every man plans to choose investments that will eventually make his estate of sizable proportions. He—and undoubtedly you, too, for all investors are alike at heart—selects his investments because of their safety, yield and suitable maturities.

These should be his primary considerations. But they are not enough—

If your estate is to be one of representative size compared to what you plan to leave you must protect your heirs from excessive Inheritance Taxes.

For Inheritance Taxes may defeat the purpose of your life-work. They may reduce your estate to a small portion of what you leave—for each of 46 States and the Federal Government has an Inheritance Tax and these may overlap in such manner as to seize over 51% of your invested principal.

By placing the importance of Inheritance Taxes alongside that of the three primary considerations of sound investment, you can leave your heirs an estate free from duplicate taxation.

By so doing you virtually increase your estate by decreasing your taxes.

Free Inheritance Tax Counsel

As a part of our investment service we have established a complete Inheritance Tax Bureau in charge of experts. This service is rendered free to investors. There is no obligation.

This department has been established to render full tax counsel and, when asked, will show you exactly what taxes affect your holdings and, when desired, will suggest methods for avoiding excessive taxation through duplication.

WHEAT HIGHER ON DEMANDS FROM ABROAD

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

Color was given to the reports circulated of late that foreigners are accumulating supplies of wheat as rapidly as possible by the purchase of over 3,000,000 bu of July wheat at Winnipeg yesterday. Part of that buying was attributed to exporters.

The bulk of the trading was at $1.05, and that market went to within 1⅛c of Chicago, compared with 3c under recently. A Chicago house was a good buyer of July here and seller at Winnipeg, but it failed to have much effect in the Canadian market. Local prices were ½@¾c lower at the last, with some selling by the local element on forecast for showers over part of the belt.

May corn acted a little tight and went to ¾c over July, with the finish unchanged to ⅛c higher. Oats were unchanged to ⅛c higher, and rye unchanged to ⅛c higher.

Wheat Lower for Week.

Despite the more bullish sentiment which prevails, the average of wheat prices for the week was lower with the finish ⅝@1⅛c as compared with a week ago. Corn was ⅝@⅞c lower, oats ⅛c higher to ⅜c lower, and rye ⅛@⅜c higher. Lard was 5@10c lower, ribs unchanged to 10c lower, and bellies 2½@5c higher to 5c lower for the week.

Dry Weather Talk Increases.

Dry weather talk from the winter wheat belt is increasing, and according to some reports unless rain comes within a few days crop deterioration claims may be expected. However, the trade has fallen dto enthuse over the prospective crop scar so far, and prices held within narrow limits for the day. May closed at $1.04½, July at $1.06⅝@1.06¾, and September at $1.07⅛.

Export sales of Manitobas at the seaboard were estimated at 300,000 bu, while St. Louis sold 50,000 bu winter for export. The trade look for a good decrease in the domestic visible supply to be shown in Monday's statement.

May Corn Leads Advance.

Buying of May and selling of July corn by cash interests was instrumental in putting the former to a premium over July and maintaining the advance at the last. Trade otherwise was light. Cash demand is still slow, but sufficient grain has been shipped east during the last week to make a fair reduction in stocks. Planting is making rapid progress with dry and warm weather.

Oats had a range of ⅛@¼c, with the action of corn the main influence. May showed the most strength. The dry weather talk is not sufficiently serious as yet to bring in much buying.

Slow Demand for Rye.

Rye was dull with the market about steady, with a noticeable lack of fresh development in the news. Considering the difference in the price of wheat and rye, the foreign call for the latter is exceptionally disappointing.

Provisions were dull, and while somewhat firmer early closed easy, with lard unchanged to 2½c lower, ribs unchanged to 2½c higher, and bellies 2½@7½c lower. Deliveries on May contracts were 100,000 lbs Jard. Prices follow:

CASH-GRAIN NEWS

Export sales of wheat at the seaboard were estimated at around 300,000 bu Manitobas, while St. Louis handlers sold 50,000 bu old crop winters for export, but several small lots sold in addition. Messages from the Pacific coast indicated that there would be a heavy movement on old crop wheat from the Columbia river territory to Europe during July and August and that some would go to the Orient. It is claimed that some Canadian oats have been sold from Atlantic ports to New Zealand.

Chicago handlers sold 22,000 bu wheat, 45,000 bu corn, 53,000 bu oats and 5,000 bu barley to the domestic trade. Deliveries on May contracts were 221,000 bu wheat, 93,000 bu corn, 156,000 bu oats, and 3,000 bu rye.

Offerings of cash wheat remain light, but the demand is rather inactive. No. 2 red here was 2@3c and No. 2 hard 2@11c over May. Receipts 14 cars. St. Louis was unchanged and Kansas City unchanged to 1c higher.

Demand for cash corn was only fair with local prices uncharged. Basis was firm with No. 2 mixed 1@1½c and yellow 2½@3½c over May with No. 3 mixed ½@¾c over May, yellow May to 1½c over and white ⅝@1c over. Receipts 54 cars. Outside markets were easier and unchanged to 1c lower, the latter at St. Louis.

St. Louis reported improvement in the southern demand for cash oats but it was not reflected in the local market. No. 2 white sold at 2@2½c and No. 3 white at ½@1¼c over May. Receipts 54 cars.

WORLD'S GRAIN MARKET NEWS

Wheat traders are more disposed to buy Winnipeg July than the Chicago or Kansas City future. Exporters have cleaned the market up there and took 3,000,000 bu of July at $1.05, making the close practically at that price. Within a week Chicago traders have in a few instances sold Winnipeg July and bought Chicago. There is a disposition to buy July here on breaks.

There is no particular trend to the corn market for the present. Shorts have reduced their commitments and longs await the disposition on the port of country holders to sell. Within a few weeks expectations are for a larger movement. The slow cash demand is the main bearish factor at present.

Indications are for good reductions in wheat stocks at Chicago and most of the leading primary markets, and also for reductions in corn and oats at Chicago in the visible supply.

A year ago July wheat at Winnipeg was 5c over Chicago, while yesterday it was 1½c discount. Foreigners are picking up the cheap wheats and are apparently taking more than they are reporting.

There is a great deal of talk about the need of rain in parts of the southwest and west. Predictions of rains in the northwest lead to selling of wheat and a moderate break at one time, while week end covering at the last made a rally.

Cash wheat in Winnipeg was ⅝c over May for No. 1 northern, with No. 2 3c under and No. 3 6½c under the May. Selling pressure of cash wheat was light, and it was said that longs there are gradually getting out. Buying orders slightly under the market were said to be a supporting influence, as offerings were absorbed on the decline.

Liverpool cables reported a better undertone to the wheat market, with a broadening demand and a fair business passing in Manitobas and Argentines. Good sales of Australian have been made.

Plowing for wheat in Argentina is progressing under favorable conditions, with indications of an increase in acreage over last year. Heavier shipments are expected in the future. Fine weather is favorable for movement of the new corn crop from the interior to seaboard ports, and it is passing out on a liberal scale.

Russell reports increasing inquiries for oats in British Columbia from the United Kingdom and New Zealand. It is estimated that 100,000 tons of grain will be shipped out of Vancouver this month.

NEWS OF THE CROPS

About 30 per cent of the wheat acreage in north central and northwestern Kansas counties needs rain because of the shallow rooted plant, according to Crop Observer E. O. Cromwell, who is out for Lamson Brothers. Cool weather has checked hessian fly damage. The other 70 per cent of the acreage will stand a lot of punishment.

Corn planting has progressed slowly in Indiana, according to the government statisticians' mid-month crop comment. Many fields are yet to be prepared. In the southern part of the state a few fields are ready to cultivate. Wheat and rye are making fairly good progress with some heading out in the extreme south.

"Wheat on creek and river bottoms looks good, but high land wheat is generally spindly, yellow, and unpromising," wired Crop Expert George M Le Count to Stein, Allatin & Co. "Some districts need rain. Chinch bugs doing considerable damage. Oats looking good. Early corn coming up to a good stand."

Seeding of spring wheat is reported as practically completed in the eastern two-thirds of North Dakota, according to Statistician J. G. Diamond's mid-month crop summary.

Deal with Reliable Investment House

The character of the house through which he buys his securities is of great importance to the investor. There are many reputable investment houses, but there is also a large number of concerns of doubtful reputation actively engaged in marketing securities of all grades. It is just as easy and just as cheap [usually a lot cheaper in the long run] to invest through the reputable houses, and yet a great many people turn their money over to the other kind, with the result that they usually suffer loss.

There are many advantages in dealing with a house with an established reputation. Such houses have built their reputation by honest dealing and by the conservative selection of the securities they handle. They are in business to stay and cannot afford to jeopardize their reputation by deviating from the methods which have built it up. The customer is assured, therefore, of honest dealing and that he will not be sold securities of doubtful value. Such houses, furthermore, will endeavor to maintain a market for the securities they handle, so that their customers will be able to sell their securities if they wish to do so.

Established investment houses are in a position to render real and valuable service to their customers. They maintain, for their own use as well as for the benefit of their customers, large statistical departments containing much important data pertaining to the companies whose securities they handle and to the securities themselves. These departments are under the charge of experts whose services, as well as the information in their files, are always freely available to their customers or prospective customers. One does not have to invest blindly, but can make careful investigation before purchasing any security and the information thus supplied may be relied upon, for it is that upon which the house itself relied in purchasing or underwriting the issues.

A reliable investment house is not satisfied simply to sell a security and then let the customer shift for himself. It will keep in touch with the condition of the securities it has hold, and if anything should go wrong with them, will endeavor to protect the interests of its customers, frequently even expending large sums of its own money to strengthen the securities and bring them back to a healthy condition.

These services and advantages are at the disposal of the investor who deals with a reliable investment house and they cost him nothing. Last but not least, such a house does not move or go out of business overnight, as do many of the houses of doubtful reputation. It is always there when you want it.

The Adviser You Should Welcome

A WOMAN can't learn investment over night. She may be a wonderful mother and homemaker, but when an estate is placed in her hands too often she becomes the prey of the shark or the victim of well meaning relatives.

Fortunately women realize the need of investment assistance. Their costly mistakes are due to misplaced confidence. But every man thinks he is a born investor, and as a real knowledge of the principles of safe investment is rare, men are losing in worthless securities, it is estimated, a half billion dollars a year.

So it is plain that dependable financial counsel is one of the most valuable things in the world, and it is this that we offer you—through our officers and executives, through our Department for Women and especially through our trained representatives who call at your home.

Back of this advisory service, given without the slightest obligation, are years of experience, the dependability of our judgment being proven by the fact that our bonds never lost a dollar.

Perhaps you would like to learn more about this House with eighty-nine years' experience before you come in and ask for advice or request a representative to call. So let us send you "Heartaches and Happiness" and other valuable investment literature until you feel better acquainted. Simply mail this coupon.

The New York Times.

New York, May 17.—[Special.]—Wall street described today's markets as reflecting midsummer inactivity. Transactions on the stock exchange were much the smallest of any Saturday since last August, and the movement of prices was pretty much confined to variations of half a point or less.

It would hardly be said that the trend of prices was perceptible in either direction. Advances and declines of an unimportant sort were distributed throughout the market, which ended as inactive as it had begun. Some of the more speculative issues and the higher priced industrials were down more than a point. Copper, petroleum, and steel issues as groups were lower. The railroad issues again held better than the industrials.

Action on Bonus Awaited.

If any particular explanation were necessary for this lifeless condition, the most plausible would doubtless be the fact that the action of congress on the bonus bill veto was immediately impending, coupled with the apprehension on the effect that failure of congress to sustain the veto might have on the taxation program.

But Wall street was ready to confess at the week-end that, whatever should happen to the bonus bill, we are in the face of a political situation whose actual meaning nobody can understand. The week's markets have indicated at least the absence of nervous apprehension—financial, industrial, or political. The public at large has been repeatedly invited by professional Wall street to show signs of such emotion; plausible grounds have been urged for it; but the public has retained composure.

Liberty Bonds in Demand.

The Liberty bond market, besides demonstrating that it had nothing in common with the stock market, showed plainly that it had much in common with the money market and the psychological state which may be said to be responsible in large measure for the lack of public participation in stock dealings. For the first time all the Liberty loan issues went above par.

While the veto of the bonus bill was an influence in their favor, the Liberties had demonstrated for many days previous that they were independent of political considerations and that behind their progress was the natural demand for government and other tax exempt issues as an investment means that would offset existing low money rates.

Foreign Exchange Rates Steady.

This week's foreign exchange market apparently moved under no other impulse than the attempt to determine the influence of the political changes in Europe on the fate of the Dawes proposals and the reparations settlement. There was little change in rates today, although the franc was an exception. A slight decline left it under 5¾ cents, whereas it stood over 6 cents on the previous Saturday.

The general course of exchange rates towards the end of the week reflected financial conviction that the new French ministry may be more efficient in settling the reparations deadlock than was the stubborn and unconciliatory Poincare régime.

FINANCIAL NOTES

A fair accumulation of overnight buying orders, based on the more cheerful tone of the weekly mercantile reviews, imparted a relatively firm tone to opening prices on the stock exchange yesterday. Operators on the long side, however, showed no disposition to follow up the advance, with the result that bear traders took advantage of the cut in copper prices to renew their attacks on the general list.

In the first flurry of buying new high records for the year were established by Atchison at 103¼ and Union Pacific at 133¾, but both stocks closed slightly below their top prices. Baltimore and Ohio held firm as publication of a favorable 1924 earnings statement. United States Steel closed fractionally lower at 96⅞. Baldwin dropped a point to 107 and fractional recessions were recorded by American Can, United States Industrial Alcohol, United States Cast Iron Pipe and Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron.

Copper for domestic shipments went below 13 cents a pound, selling at 12⅞ cents delivered to the end of July. The reduction in price resulted in active liquidation of the copper shares, with Anaconda, Magma and Mother Lode selling at their lowest prices of the year. Current low prices for copper were largely to be attributed to forced sales by concerns which took in raw products on "an average price" and did not care to carry refined metal in stock.

New minimum prices for the year also were established by Studebaker, Willys-Overland preferred and Congoleum, selling of the last named being attributed to extensive distribution by the pool which staged the recent brisk advance in that stock.

The interstate commerce commission has authorized the Great Northern railway to sell $15,000,000 general mortgage 5 per cent bonds. The Missouri Pacific railroad has applied to the Missouri public service commission for permission to issue $4,500,000 of fifteen month notes to purchase 97,500 shares of the New Orleans, Texas and Mexico stock.

The weekly New York clearing house statement showed mixed changes. Loans, discounts and investments increased $26,207,000, and net demand deposits $19,531,000. Cash in vaults dropped $4,009,000; reserve of member banks in the federal reserve bank, $10,271,000, and time deposits, $2,173,000. Aggregate reserves totaled $58,312,000, leaving excess reserve of $2,312,580, a decrease of $12,004,870 below the previous week.

Stockholders of the Parish & Bingham corporation are being advised to forward their stock to the Union Trust company of Cleveland for exchange into Midland Steel Products preferred stock. The exchange is effective May 20. The stock is exchangeable on the ratio of five shares of Parish & Bingham for one share of Midland Products preferred.

The final unit of the $1,000,000 plant of the United States Gypsum company at Sweetwater, Tex., will go into operation next month. This is the fifteenth plaster plant of the company.

OIL BURNER NOW WINS APPROVAL OF WOMEN FOLK

No More Care Than a Sewing Machine

By MARY DORIS WIDNEY

NEW YORK, May 18.—Woman's last primitive job has been taken away from her. Firing the furnace is now as old-fashioned as sweeping with a broom

With the passing of her rank as a non-union fireman goes much of her work as a janitress. Her dust rag and scrubbing brush have practically been taken out of her hands.

W. W. WILLIAMS

The reason for this new freedom is the high state of perfection that has been reached in a new-type oil burner. Women have been slow to accept oil burners just as they were slow to learn to drive the ridiculous two-cylinder motor car of a decade ago.

Simple as a Phonograph

"Machinery and femininity seldom mix," said Mrs. Edgington the noted exponent of home economics before the Woman's Guild yesterday.

"When they do, it usually means a bruised knuckle. It is not surprising that women have put up with coal and all its drudgery as long as they have. There seemed no way out of it, other than by living in an apartment hotel.

"But now that at least one oil burner has been made that requires no more attention than a phonograph or a sewing machine, no woman will deliberately order another ton of coal."

Discovers Four Laws

Walter W. Williams, inventor of the Oil-O-Matic that has won the approval of so many thousands of women and men as well, is president of the Williams Institute of Heat Research.

"We did not start to build our oil burner until we had spent years studying the laws of oil combustion," he said. "So little data was available except in industrial uses, that our engineers practically had to pioneer their way.

"Out of our research we formulated for the first time the four fixed laws for the successful burning of oil in the home. With this data, we began to build a machine that would make the best use of these laws.

"Sooner or later all oil burners will have to recognize these four laws. These laws work for your benefit. They assure success in heating the home with oil. They assure safety.

"Without these laws, cheap fuel oil can never be successfully used in the home. Eventually all oil burners will have to be adapted to the use of the cheap, lower gravity oils.

"There will always be an abundance of these inexpensive grades, but the lighter oils will become difficult to obtain and prohibitive in price. It is well to know this.

No Oil-O-Matic Ever Failed

"Experimenting cost us a fortune. But we knew that we were right. That was five years ago, and in that time we have installed many thousands of Oil-O-Matics, not a single one of which has ever failed."

It was not enough to merely build an oil burner that would work on correct principles. Folks nowadays demand automatic service and assurance of safety.

Mr. Williams appreciated that no oil burner could succeed if it did not appeal to women. In most homes, it is some woman's task to fire the furnace during the day. It is always their job to do the dusting, cleaning, polishing and scrubbing made necessary by the dirt of coal and ashes.

In making it so automatic and safe that women never need think about it, Mr. Williams also gave to men folks an oil burner that would not require even their valuable attention.

Forget There Is a Furnace

"Once installed," explained Mr. Williams, "no one ever has to look at the Oil-O-Matic again. It is automatic from the moment it starts. By that I mean, you simply set your thermostat for whatever temperature you enjoy and forget you have a heating plant.

"I remember two maiden ladies who lived together in Rockford. The furnace was always a burden to them, even though they had a man come in to care for it. After the first winter with an Oil-O-Matic one of our service men stopped to inquire how everything was. 'Why, we don't know,' one of them said, 'we have never been near it.'"

Answers Common Question

One of the most common questions asked about this new type oil burner comes from practically every woman who thinks she would like to be rid of coal. "What happens if it should go out—will the oil keep flowing?"

This is a natural question for any mother to ask. No mother would have an oil burner in the house if it were not safe. Mr. Williams explains it very simply.

"We perfected a safety device that we call a safety thermostat. The interesting thing about this ingenious device is that it will let nothing work unless everything works. The oil must light and stay lighted when it should, or not a drop of oil can flow. We do not depend on any sort of trip pan that catches liquid oil to shut off the oil feed."

With such a modern device as the Oil-O-Matic the old coal bin is not only destined to remain empty but is doomed to extinction. A vegetable cellar or children's playroom is already taking its place.

New Oil Heating Booklet Most Amazingly Frank

What is said to be the first frank discussion on oil heating in the home is in the form of an attractively illustrated booklet, "Automatic Heating," just published by the Williams Institute of Heat Research. It takes up every question that anyone has ever thought to ask and answers them with a straightforwardness that is surprising. A copy will be sent to anyone who writes to C. U. Williams & Son of Bloomington, Ill.

More time for pleasant things

This settles the question of an oil burner in your home

SOONER OR LATER, someone was bound to perfect an oil burner.

When you read this, you will realize that it was done five years ago. You can judge for yourself.

Everyone has long agreed that oil burning would be the ideal method of home heating if oil burners were correctly built. And now that one has proven itself—winter after winter—no one will deliberately choose coal—the old-fashioned way of heating.

We did not start to build an oil burner because others were being built. Too many tried that and failed. We had to build them. Our idea was so big that it forced us to prove that it was right.

Every Oil-O-Matic user says it is. Your opinion will be the same when you have this new-type, quiet oil burner.

No Oil-O-Matic Ever Failed

Inventions of such great importance are not perfected in a week, a month, or a year. They must develop. But your basement should not be used as a laboratory.

What is now being learned about oil burning in your neighbor's home, we learned five years ago in our factory. It cost us $250,000. Some would have made the public foot this bill.

The fact that no Oil-O-Matic has ever failed is evidence that the public was not asked to pay for our experiments.

Minor refinements will naturally come about, but the principle of oil burning in the Oil-O-Matic can never be improved upon. Its principles are founded on natural laws.

Proved for Five Years

Thousands of Oil-O-Matics have been installed all over the United States since 1919. Not enough, perhaps, to create a sensation. But too many if any had gone wrong.

Only 8500 can be built our way this year. Most of these are already booked. There is plenty of time for investigation—but no time for delay. The coupon above brings you full information and surprising facts.

A Finished Product

All that folks ask now is an oil burner that is past the experimental stage—a finished product. One as free from care as a common refrigerator. With no more upkeep than a phonograph. One so adaptable it will burn any kind of fuel oil without your touching it—even the drainings from a crankcase. One that keeps the inside of the boiler clean as a china plate and the upstairs comfortably warm regardless of the weather. One so efficient it runs only about 30% of the time in zero weather. Even less in mild weather. In other words, a wholly automatic, reliable, clean source of heat.

That one now awaits your inspection—fully approved by the Underwriters' Laboratories.

Consider These Facts

A complete description of the Oil-O-Matic could easily be written here and every statement true. But it would sound incredible.

Only seeing it and talking with owners will ever convince you. So look for these things:

Open the door of the furnace and you will find no part of the Oil-O-Matic inside. There's nothing to burn out or replace.

Of course there's no pilot light. None is needed. Such waste of gas cannot be tolerated in a modern oil burner.

Before You Build Get These Facts

Your new home may require a smaller and more economical heating plant with Oil-O-Matic. Our Service Department will advise you without charge.

Your heating plant may be placed in a more advantageous location.

You can save money by having a smaller basement excavation.

By eliminating the coal bin and larger furnace room you can plan better use of your basement. Many now have bright, airy playrooms, gymnasium, stag rooms, billiard rooms, maids' rooms, better laundries, etc., in place of the old-fashioned dark basement.

Our newest booklet, "AUTOMATIC HEATING" covers the subject of new homes and has valuable architectural plans for ideal, practical basements. Send the coupon now for these helpful suggestions.

Oil-O-Matic nebulizes (finer than atomizing) fuel oil into such infinitesimal particles that expensive kerosene is no longer necessary or even advised. Cheaper fuel oils give more heat.

It costs us $60,000 a year more for our motors than some engineers say is necessary. A lighter motor would stand up, they say, on 99% of installations. We spend that extra money to safeguard the remaining 1%.

New Super-Safety Device

But the crowning feature of Oil-O-Matic is the exclusive safety thermostat. It's all but human.

It watches over the entire plant. If you run out of oil, it warns you by shutting off the Oil-O-Matic.

Everything about your Oil-O-Matic installation must work 100% perfectly or this ingenious device will let nothing work—not a drop of oil can flow, ignition is shut off, the motor stops.

Any good heating plant can be quickly made into a perfect heating unit with Oil-O-Matic. Steam, vapor, hot water, hot air.

All moving parts run in oil—so once started you never need look at it again. It is automatic from that moment on.

Women alone at home, particularly appreciate this freedom from care.

These are a few of the things an inspection will make clear to you. The dealers whose names are listed at the right, will demonstrate this new-day oil burner.

Pay for It as You Use It

These dealers are authorized to offer attractive terms so that you may pay for it as you use it, if you wish.

They guarantee automatic heat, and if you feel that you are not getting it, they will remove the burner, replace your grates without charge and refund the amount paid. Our guarantee to the dealer is double assurance of satisfaction.

Mail the coupon above for a copy of "Automatic Heating." We know of no booklet on oil heating that is as instructive and authoritative. Tear out the coupon now as a reminder to send for it. After you read it you will want to be one of the 8500 who are going to rid themselves next winter of the uncertainty, dirt and drudgery of coal.

Dealers Anxious to Get Sales Rights

That an oil burner can be made as dependable as a vacuum cleaner is proved by the five-year record of the Oil-O-Matic.

"Not a single one has ever failed," claims W. W. Williams, inventor of this new type oil burner with its many exclusive safety devices. "It is not surprising that dealers throughout the country are now eager to get the sales rights to an oil burner that gives such unfailing service."

A FOOL WHEN IT COMES TO WOMEN

By Thyra Samter Winslow

The Story of One Who Found That Dreams Belong to Youth, and So Parted, Philosophically, with His Last Fond Illusion

They kissed good night, held so tightly in one another's arms in the dark hallway. How sweet she was—Evelyn—her soft hair, her rounded body.

THERE was no question about it. All those who knew him well said the same thing: "A big man, Morris Gates, one of the biggest novelists of the day, actually, but an awful fool when it comes to women."

The public, of course, accepted Morris Gates at his publisher's press agent's valuation. They knew nothing of his personal life except what was given to them in neat Sunday newspaper stories or still neater articles in the talky magazines devoted to intimate and untrue stories of the literati. The public demands that its people of interest be either heroes or villains. It refuses to accept even a tincture of villainy mixed with virtue—and as for foolishness—a person of interest cannot be foolish. To the public Morris Gates was a most sensible and distinguished individual, a correctly groomed man of middle age who was to be seen at the opening nights of the best plays, lunching at the Algonquin or the Ritz, and dining at the Brevoort or Delmonico's or Pierre's. The newspapers and magazines showed pictures of Gates' country home up in Westchester, correctly done by one of the best Madison avenue decorators.

They showed pictures, too, of Mrs. Gates, and spoke frequently of her womanly charms and warm hospitality. Mrs. Gates, in fact, was worth many stories just by herself. She wasn't one of these modern women always running around and doing foolishly sensational things. She liked to say, herself, that she supposed, having been a small town girl, that she was almost last generation in her ideas. She felt that her duty lay in being a good housekeeper, seeing that her home was always in perfect order, playing cards a bit for relaxation, entertaining friends. Before each of Gates' books appeared you couldn't help seeing stories about Gates and his home and his hobbies—first editions and antiques mostly—and Mrs. Gates and their splendid and happy, though thoroughly democratic, home life.

The oddest part of the thing is that Gates' acquaintances agreed with the public in its valuation of Mrs. Gates. She really was a splendid woman, they said. She was a little stupid, perhaps, but, after all, isn't it best to have a wife just a bit stupid? What man would want a woman who knew more than he did, anyhow? Mrs. Gates was no beauty, of course, but then she was no uglier or stupider than she had been when Gates married her. After all—he had married her. Then, at his age, an age that should have meant comfort and arm chairs, why did he keep on making a fool of himself over women? The public didn't know that, of course. He was safe there. His foolishness was not the kind that would get out and ruin him financially. It probably wasn't even enough to cause his wife to get a divorce if she found out about it. There were those, even, who said she knew and found it easier to close her eyes to the whole thing—and thereby maintain her position and dignity—than to make any sort of a scene.

It wasn't as if Gates gained anything by his actions. He didn't. Not a thing. He didn't even pursue the women, himself, if it comes to that. The women ran after him. They pursued him because they knew they could pursue him—and capture him. There had been enough precedence to prove that. Gates wasn't especially good looking. These last few years, even, he had gained flesh and his face was a bit puffy around the eyes, too full around the chin. Fat was even starting to hang over his collar, if you caught a glimpse of his profile when he was not making an effort to hold up his head. The back of his neck, that last foothold of masculine youth and charm, was fat, too. He was still a good looking fellow, tall, though inclined to be a trifle round shouldered. His nose was just a bit too large, though in the various drawings of him printed about the times his books appeared this added a necessary touch of strength and firmness to his face.

Women ran after Gates because he was easy. He didn't seem to know how to get rid of them. If kept after long enough, he would always buy them things. He was eager for praise and flattery. If left alone, it is quite possible he would never have sought out any woman—certainly not the type which pursued him. They were always little girls, pretty, with a lot of hair, kitten faces and small turned up noses, and no signs of brains. He would take them on parties, two or three at a time, with a couple of his men friends. The men would get to talking, mostly literary shop, about who was writing what, and do you think that Dreiser will ever do another "Jennie Gerhardt," and wasn't Hergesheimer's "The Bright Shawl" an awful let-down from "Cytherea," and what were the younger generation coming to—after all, weren't most of them over thirty and not so young, anyhow? The girls wouldn't even join in the conversation. They weren't the type which read anything excepting fashion and motion picture magazines. Not a single mentality test has ever been invented in which they could have passed with an average intelligence of over twelve years. The girls just sat and giggled and powdered their noses. After they had eaten and drunk and giggled and powdered their noses for four or five hours the men would have had enough drinks to pay attention to them. Then the girls would wake up and introduce their glittering conversation and sex charms.

Gates never did evident things that he shouldn't do. He just stepped on toes under the table, put his arms around girls, pinched their shoulders, kissed them. He spent his money—gave the girls a good time. He was just an old fool—a fool when it came to women. That was all there was to it. When he was with a woman he simply couldn't refuse her anything. He always did what was expected of him. He always had been that way. If he hadn't been——

Morris Gates had come from Glenville, Ia., a slow, pleasant, brown little town. He was one of a family of three boys. Being the middle one, he had been neither his father's nor his mother's favorite. His father was a lawyer, though not an especially progressive one. He shared a dusty law office on the second floor of the Brooker Block, a gloomy brick building which, with its three stories and white stone trimmings, was important in Glenville in those days. The older son, Frank, studied law and later went into his father's office. The law practice held out no encouragement for a greater number of Gates boys, though Morris cared nothing about law, anyway. The youngest boy, Will, became a civil engineer and finally went to South America.

Mrs. Gates was a pleasant, round faced little woman with thick brown hair which she wore severely plain. She had a seemingly pleasant but really rather obstinate nature. It is quite certain that in his youth Morris formed the habit of giving in to women. After all, when his mother said a thing she meant it. She was pleasant enough, jolly even, if he gave in to her. What was the use of arguing or disobeying? It really didn't mean anything, yielding to the trifles she insisted on, anyhow.

Morris spent rather a lazy, pleasant boyhood, helping a bit around the house and the garden. There was always one servant to assist his mother indoors. The boys took care of the yard and the horse and surrey themselves. There were bicycles, a pony, the playthings they wanted.

GRACE BLAIR lived next door to the Gates'. She was a nice little thing with a pleasant, brisk air, and annoyed Morris only when she reminded him too strongly of his mother. Because she was just a few months younger than he was, her company was forced upon him at picnics and parties. He never thought of rebelling. He enjoyed being with her, even. Of course, girls couldn't play games that boys liked and Grace didn't want to climb the way some girls—tomboys—did. He would go across his lawn to hers of a summer evening and, lying on the grass under the trees, they would talk about life and what they wanted to do.

Always Morris saw certain lacks in Grace. Even when he didn't know definitely what he wanted to do, but had just a vague, lovely, opalescent idea of something grand in the future, Grace didn't want to be anything at all. She did want to be a trained nurse for a year or two, but then her father cut his hand and she happened to see blood and grew nauseated and found she didn't want to be a nurse after all. However, she would listen with a fair amount of patience to Morris. She wasn't a popular girl.

During high school days Morris lacked ambition to hunt for a real sweetheart. For a few months while he was a sophomore he had rather a definite crush on Petty James, from Garretsville, who visited her cousins, the Tuckers. Petty had curls and tossed her head and opened her eyes wide, tricks he hadn't noticed in the home girls. He kissed her going home from a dance one night and felt elated and dizzy over it for days. Then Petty went back to Garretsville and forgot to write to him, though she had promised, so the affair died. Gates never saw Petty again, but he always thought of her as his first sweetheart.

Almost unconsciously on his part, he began to go with Grace Blair. He would find her name in his invitations to dances. She would ask him to accompany her to informal parties. It was easier to ask her, in turn, than to invite some girl who never noticed him. There was no other girl he cared about, really. He did wish Grace read. He would take books over to her house and later would try to talk about them to her. It wasn't until many years afterwards that he found out that Grace had skimmed through the books just enough to be able to listen intelligently, sometimes reading only the paragraphs which he had marked as being really important.

When he was graduated from high school, Gates went to a nearby state university. Grace, who was graduated at the same time, stayed at Home. She had grown into a slim, not unpleasing girl with mild gray eyes and a decided though quite feminine manner. She was not especially popular with the boys, who liked to dance with her but didn't care enough for her to act as escorts.

There were no girls Gates cared about, especially, at the university. Most of the women were rather severe and studious, who had a career as a school teacher all picked out if they didn't find a husband in the meantime. If they had known Gates' real nature, they might have been nicer to him and one of them might have captured him. However, he seemed rather a diffident, aloof young man with no thoughts of matrimony, so they didn't encourage him a great deal. One or two of the prettier, more frivolous sorority girls giggled up at him, and he took them to dances and bought them sodas, but they were searching for a romance, which Gates didn't seem to represent.

It was the first time he had been away from home, and he was decidedly homesick. He wrote to his mother, who answered with brief but most affectionate letters, sending him small extra sums she had saved out of her household allowance, quite as she did for Frank, two years ahead of Morris, and would do for Will, when he entered the university. Morris wrote to Grace, too. Grace answered his letters promptly and in detail. If she exaggerated a bit of her own popularity, she always included, too, just the home news he was looking for. She had a neat, orderly, ordinary mind, capable of tabulating items of interest. If her letters lacked charm, Morris was unaware of it. He grew fonder of Grace those years at school than he had ever been while he lived next door to her.

Morris stayed only two years at the state university. During those years he took all of the English courses which interested him, even choosing junior and senior subjects. He began definitely, then, to be a writer. He took one course in daily theme writing, the nearest thing to a study of the short story which his school offered. He wrote on such subjects as "What I Saw on My Way to Class" and "The Need of Co-operative University Spirit." Stupid and uninspiring! He had a position on the school weekly, but the faculty supervision was so close that nothing he wrote seemed to have any real interest. He didn't distinguish himself as a student even in his literary classes, though, years later, the university gave him an honorary degree.

WHEN he came home from school, Morris loafed for a summer, pretending to make up his mind whether or not to go back to the university. He wanted to go east to school, but his parents were horrified at the idea. Mid-western schools were good enough for their children. Besides, they said they could not afford to spend any more money for [illegible] education. It never occurred to him to go east and work his way through school. Always lazy, this would have seemed especially disagreeable. Too, it would have lowered, in his own opinion, his position. As the son of a lawyer, he had inherited a certain social state, and, while he was not a snob, he never went out of his way to meet people in lower strata of society.

Morris saw a great deal of Grace that summer. She was always popping into his house to borrow something from his mother or to bring back a magazine or a cooking recipe. She was always pleasant and fresh looking and had a jolly word for him. Again, unconsciously, he began taking her to the social affairs the town offered. People got into the habit of saying "Grace and Morris," and, if Grace encouraged this, it never occurred to Morris to discourage it. His mother liked Grace, he knew. He never thought of marrying Grace. He never thought of marrying any one. Life stretched ahead, then, beautifully dim. The vague, multicolored dreams of his early youth had taken more definite form, that was all. He read, all of his spare time, everything he could lay his hands on, current novels, philosophies, even the essays which were considered good form by his mother's literary club. He wished Grace liked to read. It would have given them so much more to talk about. O, well, Grace listened when he read to her, believed in his future—said so, anyhow.

In the fall Morris got a position on the Glenville daily paper, the Glenville News. He was the only regular reporter. The city editor and he got out the paper, the owner contributed long, handwritten editorials, and a Miss Faye brought in, each afternoon, closely written pages of society. Morris knew this job was unimportant, but he knew he would have to have experience before he could get anything better. He liked the paper. He liked tramping around Glenville looking for local stories, meeting trains, interviewing prosperous merchants and the town's odd characters. He got free tickets to whatever theatrical performances came to town and took his mother and Grace. A year of it—he was tired of Glenville.

He saved enough money to go to Chicago. He got there in early fall. It was his second visit. He had been there for a week with his father when he was a youngster. He had been reading The Chicago Tribune each day at the newspaper office, and he wanted to get a job on that paper. He found a cheap little room in North State street. He was young enough to enjoy the wind and the dust. There was no vacancy on The Tribune for an unknown, unskilled reporter. He hung around the newspaper office, fascinated by it, and began bringing in little news stories he picked up around town. Finally a good natured editor sent him out on a story. A week later and he was on the staff—on a salary of fifteen dollars a week. He felt now that a literary career had really begun for him.

He worked from one in the afternoon until eleven or twelve at night. He was sent out on obscure murder stories, obscure scandals, obscure interviews. He seldom made the first page. On the other hand, his stories did get into the inside pages practically as he wrote them. His work was without distinction, but it was readable. On his days off he would wander around Chicago, the parks, the west side. What a wonderful city it was! He would make up sentences about it which he felt he could use in stories later. He nearly always had a library book in his pocket and was always drinking coffee in little lunchrooms near The Tribune Building.

Morris wrote letters to his mother and to Grace on his office typewriter. He wrote frequently, in answer to their letters, though he thought, "they aren't getting this letter. This isn't the kind of a letter they want." He could visualize Grace running over to his mother with a letter from him. He wasn't interested in Grace's letters from Glenville now. They seemed unnecessarily petty. He had got over being homesick. He felt that, if he kept on, something grand, almost anything, might happen to him. He began to write stories and impressions in his spare time. This was better than letter writing. He even began to submit some of the stories to eastern magazines.

IT was about this time that he met Evelyn Hollins. She was a music student and had a room in the same rooming house he did. Mrs. Walsh, the landlady, introduced them, quite formally, though for days afterwards they met in the hall and exchanged only brief nods. Morris did not meet other people in the rooming house, for the others had the usual commercial hours of employment.

Evelyn Hollins was of medium height, inclined to be a trifle plump, perhaps. She had brown eyes, straight brows, and indefinite, fluffy light brown hair. Morris liked her appearance. One day, at twelve, as he was going out for his combination breakfast and lunch before going to the office, he met Evelyn in the hall and stopped to talk with her. Perhaps it was she who started to talk. At any rate, they went out together and soon were seated across the table from one another at a nearby dairy lunchroom. Being young and ambitious, in half an hour they had found fifty things to talk about.

Evelyn burst upon Morris as an almost amazing revelation. He had not thought it possible that a woman—that any one—could be like that. He had thought himself odd because of his dreams. Here he had been near her all these weeks—hadn't guessed she was like this—sparkling, ambitious, understanding.

Evelyn was studying to be an opera singer. She was quite frank about the beauty of her voice. She was twenty—Morris was twenty-two. She had come from a little town in Illinois. She was poor. Her people were making all sorts of small sacrifices to give her a musical education. She didn't know many people in Chicago, excepting music students who bored her.

That meal was the beginning of a series of long talks. Morris found that Evelyn had read quite as much as he had, though along slightly different lines. Her father was a druggist, who had literary leanings and was always buying sets of books from traveling book agents. In Evelyn's home there was a set of sixty histories of the world, bound in red, a set of Voltaire, a full set of the works of Schopenhauer. She and her father were the only members of rather a large family who had read any of them.

A girl who read! A girl who had read more than he had! A girl who wanted to be some one—who was talented—gifted—who was going to be some one! A girl who understood how it felt to have vague, untranslatable longings—a pretty girl, too, with brown eyes and a rounded body, a sensible girl who liked walks and talks and dreams.

Together they read and talked. They would talk for hours, any time, any place. Most unconventionally, Evelyn would wait until she heard Morris come in at night, and would run into his room for a chat. They were quite sure that they would be ejected from the house if Mrs. Walsh ever found them together, though they always left Morris' door open, just a trifle, as a sop for conventionality. They never did the least thing any one in the boarding house couldn't have seen. In fact, their friendship was singularly unsexed. To both it was the first time a real outlet for ideas had come. They found themselves pouring out half formed thoughts and fancies. They laughed at what they considered unusual whimsy. They thought themselves superior, laughed at others for not seeing their worth. They made plans, aloud, for the future. Unconsciously, they made plans for a future together.

At the office, waiting to be sent out on assignments, Morris began to work harder on short stories which he could read to Evelyn. He would read these to her in the morning, in the boarding house parlor, which they had to themselves then. Of course Evelyn liked the things he wrote. He was better than Meredith; Or Henry James! He was going to be a real writer, not one of these popular boys who appealed to the public. He wouldn't care anything about the public. He'd write for the few, the discriminating ones.

Evelyn's voice—of course she'd go east to study soon, then to Europe—no use bothering where the money was to come from now—then the Metropolitan Opera house—triumphs. He'd be a famous novelist, though awfully highbrow. She'd be a real singer—famous, both of them—their pictures in the paper, though they'd really not care about that part of it—real fame—together.

Evelyn would sing for him, accompanying herself on the always out of tune piano, though she herself paid for its rent and its tuning. He frankly did not like the things he called "classic selections." He liked sentimental songs best. Always, in years to come, he remembered them and her singing. "Spring Rain" was one song, and the line, "You and the warm spring rain—you and the call of a bird——" and others about absence and forgetting and loneliness.

ON his days off, now, they would go around the city together, eating in queer restaurants which they would discover, talk of New York—and wish that Chicago had a Bohemian district. He introduced her to reporters he knew and the reporters would bring their wives or girl friends and they would go on parties, together, sometimes. Morris and Evelyn enjoyed being alone, more. There was always so much to talk about—a book to read or quote from, a magazine story to discuss, an idea to express, books of poems to moon over—what good times they had.

An eastern magazine bought one of Morris' stories! The first time he sent it out! It seemed unbelievable. He got thirty dollars for it! He and Evelyn had a grand party. A real dinner first, then the theater on tickets the dramatic critic had given him, and then a supper after the theater. Things were beginning—life was starting—Evelyn's vocal teacher had said——

Another story—an editor's note—"come to see us when you are in the east." Two more stories—fifty dollars for one of them! How easy it was going to be to get famous! They made more definite plans, now. They evolved this: He would go east and Evelyn would come on next fall—it was June, now—she was going home, anyhow, for a visit with her folks.

June. Evelyn's school closed for the season. Next year—New York. Each night, now, they held hands as they talked, kissed goodnight when they separated, held so tightly in one another's arms in the dark hallway which smelled always of kerosene and long eaten dinners. How sweet she was—Evelyn—her soft hair, her rounded body.

They said good-by, there in the dark hallway. Such a little while until fall—and New York.

Morris kept on at the paper to save more money before going east. Stories didn't write themselves as easily with Evelyn away. He wrote to his folks, told them he was going east. His mother answered at once, said he was to come home. He owed it to all of them to visit Glenville before going east—if he insisted on going so far away. Even while he felt the opposition in her letters, Morris thought that perhaps he ought to do as she said. After all, she was his mother. She hadn't ever shown much interest in his career—but now that he was getting ahead—weren't all of the men in the office of the opinion that he had a great future—might as well yield to her in such a little thing.

Grace wrote, too. How good it would be to see him again. Was he really going east to be a writer? Had he heard that—local news, then, for five pages.

He gave up his newspaper job—he would have given it up, anyhow, in a month or two—and went to Glenville. It was only a night's trip. He would stay there a few weeks, have a nice visit with his family—then New York.

He lay awake in his berth that night, and thought of Evelyn and New York. What great things they could do, together! Even then he was uneasy, unhappy. Maybe he shouldn't have taken this trip back to Glenville, after all. Still, if he hadn't gone, his mother would never have forgiven him. It was a long trip to New York. He mightn't get back in years. Grace, too—she might have believed that he had been serious. He had never proposed to her, actually. Still, her letters—they had been together a lot. He wanted to tell her about Evelyn—get everything settled nicely.

His brother, Frank, met him at the station. Will was in Colorado—hadn't gone to South America, then. At the first sight of the town, the small, disorderly, dingy station, his brother, a bit seedy looking already, though out of school only a few years, he had a great feeling of uneasiness. He was sorry he had come ba[illegible] Well, they couldn't get him—get a hold on him—keep him here. New York!

The cottage seemed small. His mother seemed more unpleasantly dominant, his father less important, too yielding. Yet he had been away such a short time. They spoke of little, useless things. No one praised his stories or spoke of his career. Conceited, of course! Still, he did want just a little praise.

Grace came to borrow flour—and welcome him. She was thinner than he had remembered her, scrawny almost. She acted shy, different, and yet almost forced him to kiss her. Kiss her! Of course! He had kissed Grace before he went away! It hadn't meant anything. He had almost forgotten it.

That night some of the boys came in to see him. He was uneasy, restless, had nothing to say to them. He spent the next day rambling about town, stopping in at the newspaper office, walking down the dull business street. The men stood in front of their stores gossiping, in their shirt sleeves—he had almost forgotten they did that. They stopped him.

"'Lo there, Morris. Home to stay? Where you bin? O, yes, so your pa said. Chicago—writin' on the paper there, wasn't you?"

His ambitions—his dreams.

He went home, wrote a letter to Evelyn. Why did he have to tell her not to worry, that everything was all right? Of course everything was all right.

THAT night he went to see Grace. His mother reminded him that it was the thing to do.

Why was it the thing to do? Why was it the thing to do to sit on Grace's dark porch and—yes—kiss Grace? He tried to talk with her. There was nothing to say. Grace hadn't read a book since he left. She seemed vaguely interested, in a giggly, personal sort of way, in what he had been doing, in what he was going to do.

Was he engaged to Grace? Was he? It seemed a dreadful yet definite sort of a nightmare. His mother didn't help him out. She settled things instead. Of course, Grace took it for granted. His father and brother and mother took it for granted. Grace's family—the whole town.

He was engaged to marry Grace! He hadn't asked her to marry him. He knew that. Yet it was all settled. Every one knew. He—why he was going to marry Evelyn, some time, when they had both succeeded in New York. New York! Why had he come back to Glenville? He couldn't get away now! If he could get away!

Grace hadn't been popular while he was gone. She didn't have any other suitors. She definitely wanted matrimony. More than that—she wanted to get away from Glenville—wanted to live in New York. She was not ambitious. Of course not. Not even, definitely, for Morris. She wanted New York because she had always wanted to live in a city—she felt she was too good for Glenville, where she wasn't even popular. In New York she would know what was in style, could see new shows, go shopping in Fifth avenue.

One night Morris tried to tell her about Evelyn. He wanted to ask for his freedom. Grace couldn't or wouldn't understand. She "forgave" him instead for having forgotten her, even for a little while. Those bad city women! She was glad it was no worse, she told Morris.

In Chicago, Glenville with its little aims and conventions and beliefs and people had seemed far away, unreal, inconsequential. Now, in Glenville, even though he knew he was going to get out, it was real and serious. Grace was real. So was his mother. The town's opinions seemed to fasten around him. He tried to talk to his mother about breaking off with Grace. She wouldn't even take his ideas seriously. She told him all young men felt that way—of course they would have to start modestly—they could even stay in Glenville, if he liked, for a time—or go to the city—Grace had had some money left by an uncle last year—they could use that to furnish a flat—or to live on even, while they were getting a start.

Grace planned the wedding, definitely. She invited her best girl friends to be bridesmaids. It would be a church wedding—"the culmination of a youthful love affair." Morris thought of running away at night. He couldn't do it—couldn't hurt them—his mother and Grace. He wanted to push out—stop things—there was nothing he could do. After all—— that he was in Glenville. Anyhow, Evelyn was more like him. She would understand things—she was a part of him, really. He could hurt Evelyn. He couldn't hurt Grace. Why, she hadn't any ambitions—nothing else. He was all Grace had.

There was Evelyn. Evelyn wasn't here—didn't seem real, now

A FOOL WHEN IT COMES TO WOMEN . . . . . By Thyra Samter Winslow

He wrote to Evelyn, tried to explain in broken, half sentences—waited for an answer—hoped she would telegraph him. That would be definite—he could get away then. She never answered his letter.

Grace and Morris were married in church, as Grace and his mother had planned. It was a pretty wedding. Every one said so. The young couple left for New York. What could he have done, anyhow? Morris Gates didn't change much as he grew older. He had always been a fool when it came to women.

THE newspapers have kept you informed of Morris Gates' career. He did newspaper work after he came to New York. He wrote short stories. The more particular critics who represented a certain top layer of culture spoke—and still speak—a bit sneeringly of Morris Gates' writings. They say his later things never came up to the promise, the vague hint of genius, he showed in his first short stories. After all, though, as more moderate critics have pointed out, those were half formed things and youthful, without definite style. Morris Gates' first novel came out when he had been in New York three years. The magazines often tell how much he owes to his wife's help and encouragement, in that first novel. He dedicated it to her, and he dedicated the next novel to his mother.

Morris was loyal enough to his wife those first years. Even those who know him best admit that. It wasn't until later, when he had money and the girls started paying attention to him, that he seemed to develop his well known characteristic toward women. It's a shame, too. As his friends say, "he is such a fine man in every other way, but a fool when it comes to women."

Morris did not see Evelyn again for many years, not until a few months ago, in fact. He had lost all track of her. He wrote to her again, after he got to New York. He wrote to her home and to Chicago, asking that the letters be forwarded. She never answered. He knew no other way of getting in touch with her. He looked for her, vaguely, in every crowd, on the street, at the theater, every place, those first years. To him she was the bright star—apart—some one to see again, some time, to come back to, to make life worth while—to start out with, all over again.

They were hard years, those first ones. Newspaper work was tiresome, even when he managed to get a job. He wasn't a good reporter, anyhow. The stories he liked to write—the sort he and Evelyn had planned, in Chicago—didn't go as well, didn't sell, either. When they did sell, they went to magazines which paid very little. Grace didn't like that. She had met a few writers and writers' wives. If Morris really was so smart, he ought to be able to make money like the others did. Of course, there was a lot of foolish talk, but, after all, don't people always judge an author's success by the money he makes?

Morris wrote his first novel—his second—his third. He found a style that people liked—not as much fun—nor as hard work—as writing the way he had planned. After all, though, wasn't he getting to be a successful writer, a big man?

He'd always stay married to Grace. He knew that. There was no way out of it, no way of getting rid of Grace. Of course not. She was too well satisfied. She had done well for herself. He was all she had. After all, as wives go—she was all right—liked to spend money—still, she did keep the house together pretty well, knew how to get along with the servants, didn't run around with men like some wives—that was something. What pretty girls there were in New York! No harm taking them to teas or dinners—kissing them—they liked it—telephoned him—made engagements. After all——

What if he were getting fat? He wasn't young any more. Not very young, anyhow. Young enough for pretty girls to like, though. Of course, they liked him because he spent money, because he was famous—a writer. He didn't mind that. It was a tribute to him, wasn't it? He had made himself a writer. He deserved all he got.

He dreamed of Evelyn, of course, and what his life with her would have been. Long hours together—well, this was life, his life—it wasn't so bad—in a way.

Where was Evelyn? Had she failed. Hadn't she even come to New York? She was the one woman who was different, who understood. Evelyn—O, well, some day, perhaps——

ONE night at dinner he met a chap he had known in Chicago, years before.

"By the way," the fellow said, "I see your old girl is in opera here this winter."

"My old girl?" asked Morris idly. There were many old girls now.

"Yes, wasn't her name Hollins—Evelyn Hollins? Isn't she singing at the Metropolitan—Gabrielle d'Estrees—some one said that was her. Ever see her?"

"I—I just lost track of her," Morris managed.

The next afternoon, a matinee, he was at the Metropolitan. He hadn't even thought to find out if she were singing. He wasn't accustomed to opera—only went when women dragged him there. It bored him frightfully.

Yes—there her name was—on the program. Gabrielle d'Estrees—how affected—not like Evelyn.

If it were she—how many years—would she have changed—as he had changed? Middle aged—singing here.

The part was a small one. He was disappointed. Was this the answer to her ambitions? Of course, she was no longer young. Had she been singing all these years? He didn't know the name. He would have heard it, surely, if she were famous.

She came on. No. Yes! It was Evelyn! She was frankly fat, as he was frankly fat, too, for that matter. She wore an unattractive costume of cheap stuff. Her hair was hanging—or was it a wig? It was dark red now—not as long as it had been. He remembered it soft and indefinite and brown.

The lights glared—the music went on and on—tiresome. Her part was tiresome, too. A sort of servant, unimportant. Was this what she had dreamed?

He wanted to get away. Yet something made him give his card to an attendant, after the first act. The attendant came back a few minutes later.

"Miss d'Estrees will see you after the performance—back stage—her dressing room," she said.

The opera went on—a blaze—a blare—music—lights—half an hour more—now—Evelyn——

Morris stumbled his way back of the scenes. He had been behind a number of times during performances of dramas and musical comedies, never at the opera house. The flies, the turns disconcerted him. A man in overalls told him where to go—a passage—an unimportant door. He knocked.

"Yes? Come in," Evelyn's voice.

She was seated at her dressing table. Her hair was brushed back. She was applying a street makeup. She had on an elaborately embroidered dressing gown, dirty at the hem.

"Well, well," said Evelyn. "Welcome. Morris Gates—of all people—sit down."

"I—I just found out," said Morris. Isn't it funny—after all these years. Your name, you see."

"Odd you found me. I haven't been singing long in America. I've lived in France. I'm quite a favorite there. I shall go back when my contract is up here—a season or two more. It's been hard there, these last few years, since the war."

Morris noticed that she had an almost imperceptible accent, a grouping of sounds, an intonation, that was foreign. He noticed, too, that her features had coarsened. There were deep lines on her forehead and around her mouth. Evelyn—here—next to him! He felt he should be thrilled. He had a sort of dull unbelief instead.

Evelyn went on:

"I needn't ask how you've been. You look extraordinarily well. The years——"

"A long time, Evelyn. I've thought of you so often. I've wanted to see you."

"Still the sentimentalist. I ought to be furious at you. I was once, years ago. I laughed when I read, in your last book——"

"You do read me then?" This eagerly.

"O, yes, sometimes. In France——"

"I've wanted to see you. I didn't know where you were. Your name——"

"O," she laughed. "I didn't choose that to get away from you. My first husband gave it to me for a stage name. He said I looked like a picture—like 'La Belle Gabrielle.' She was the daughter of Antoine d'Estrees—and Henry IV. fell in love with her—a painting of her."

"Your first husband? Then——"

"You think I—mourn—all these years?" She arranged her hair into loose coils. It was frankly dyed.

SOME one at the door. The knob turned. A man walked in. He was a slender foreigner with a large head and unmistakably Latin features. He said something, a bit impatiently, in Italian.

"All right," said Evelyn. Then, "Morris, I want you to meet my husband—my third."

The man bowed stiffly, went over and sat down on a pile of bright fabrics in one corner of the dressing room—there were no other chairs. He went into a sort of detached, sullen silence. Evelyn talked on.

"O, yes, I've been married—this time five years. We are—happy. Matrimony is a matter of habit, after a while. Don't you think?"

"Evelyn," Morris said, he never knew why he said it, "do you know—I want you to know—you are the only woman I ever loved, really. I want you to know."

She laughed. It was a hard laugh, Morris thought. He was sorry he had said that, now. Evelyn said something, quickly, in Italian, to the man in the corner. It made Morris feel stupidly an outsider, the way hearing an unfamiliar language always makes one feel.

"I told him you've always loved me," she said.

"Of course—everybody's sweetheart—Mary Peckfort," said the third husband, and laughed at his own wit.

Morris got to his feet.

"I hope I shall see you again," he said, almost mechanically.

"I'm afraid not," said Evelyn, and stood up, too. She seemed shorter than he remembered her, coarser, too. The years——

"We're awfully busy—rehearsals, you know—my husband sings, too—small parts—we go to France as soon as the season is over here. It was good of you to come in."

Morris nodded a good-by. He was relieved, really. How could he explain her, coarse, middle aged—introduce her—to his friends.

He was out on the street again. He was dizzy, almost, though he didn't know why he should be. A trifle sad, too. He shouldn't have said that—you could say a thing like that to some people—young girls—and not mean anything—Evelyn might think——

He would walk home. They were in the town house for the winter.

So—that is what had become of Evelyn—small parts—the Metropolitan, though—three husbands—no, she hadn't mourned. Why should she at that?

Would he have been better off with Evelyn? How fat she was! Still, he was fat, too. Both dead—drowned in their own fat. He laughed at the conceit. Well, he hadn't needed her. He was a success—had made himself a success. He had things—in a way.

He was sorry he had gone to see her. Why had he gone? He had destroyed his dream of her—something to look forward to. That husband—that third husband—years younger than she, had laughed at him, would laugh when he was gone. Well, he had made more of a success than she had made—far more—a successful writer, famous. Dreams, of course—they went with youth. If he hadn't had his fling with Evelyn it would have been with some other woman after all.

At the corner of Fifth avenue and Forty-seventh street a girl overtook him. She was young and giggly and blonde.

"I'm all breathless," she said. "I was sure it was you, so I ran and ran. Doris was telling me about the party for Thursday. Do you want me to bring Lucile Baker? She's the black haired girl who was with me in the Plaza on Tuesday. I saw Bob Lucas and he said——"

This was more like it. Why remember Evelyn, things like that? Every man makes mistakes in his life—especially where women are concerned. What was it some one had said to him the other night when they were all stewed? O, yes, that he, Morris Gates, was a fool when it came to women. Well, maybe he was. Weren't other men, too? He thought so.

He suggested tea. The little blonde giggled and nodded. They turned toward the Ritz.

"Evelyn," Morris said—he never knew why he said it—"do you know—I want you to know—you are the only woman I ever loved, really. I want you to know."

THIS time a doctor not merely "looks at literature," but jumps into it with both feet—and wearing hobnailed boots rather than dancing pumps. Dr. Jacob Wendell Clark, putting down for the nonce his medicine case, takes to the typewriter and whacks out a novel of such power that one might almost fancy Thomas Hardy had written it, in collaboration with the late Mr. Darwin. "In the Sight of God" (Covici-McGee) is a big story, and one to be read by intelligent people. Grim realism stalks across the desolate copper country of northern Michigan, and a picaresque squad of characters, one of whom, Staggerin' Smith, is greater than any of Sherwood Anderson's mumbling men. As for Dr. Clark's style, it is not so smooth as, for example, Comrade Hergesheimer's; but it is the rough going that makes "In the Sight of God" so real. Yet it is not merely a tour de force of realism: the plot catches your interest from the stormy night of Jane Towerover's disappearance and carries you along. It is a novel not difficult to read: a novel of unusual excellence.

Two Chicago young women, one younger than the other, have brought out new volumes of verse within the last fortnight: Miss Harriet Monroe and Miss Dorothy Dow. Miss Monroe, who, with the possible exception of Mlle. Amy Lowell, is the most famous woman in poetry circles in America, has gathered the best of her own verse into "The Difference and Other Poems" (Covici-McGee). And while we frankly confess we know little about poetry, nevertheless it seems to us that in "Black Babylon" (Boni & Liveright) Miss Dow has captured some priceless pagan moods and a deal of beauty.

This is Kipling week. And it is, at best, a slight and tardy gesture of appreciation to a great master. For, at the risk of jeers from our generation, we do not hesitate to proclaim from the roof tops that we believe Rudyard Kipling to be the greatest living literary man. Had he died twenty years ago the world, and all those who pick up their ideas of literature in Russian tearooms, would be bandying his name about with cheers and genuflecting before his photograph. But because he had the ill fortune to keep on living he has been forgotten, and the colleges and the critics (to their shame) have taught us to sniff at Kipling. In all justice, Rudyard Kipling is as great as any poet of the last quarter century, and as a story teller greater than De Maupassant or O. Henry, and more Russian than the Russians themselves. We have enjoyed reading the Doubleday-Page edition of his St. Andrews university address, "Independence," just published.

"For Love of a Sinner," by Robert Gordon Anderson (Minton-Balch), is the jolliest novel we have read in ages, and it concerns itself with our favorite character in the annals of poetry and crime, Master Francois Villon. Mr. Anderson, writing with some humor and much fidelity to the period, has achieved a tale of roguery and romance in medieval France that should, by all the laws of chance, become a best seller. It is almost as swift and twice as subtle as Sabatini at his best: moreover, it is believable. The story of Francois Villon, that gay and tattered rogue who "had the poet's heart and the card sharp's wit," as Mr. Anderson has given it to us, makes fascinating reading.

The pensive young man to the right is no less personage than Gilbert Seldes, one of the early fathers of the "young intellectual" movement, a critic of more or less renown, crowned by the "Vanity Fair" academy, and author of "The Seven Lively Arts" (Harper). In this gay newyorkish volume Dr. Seldes disports himself with enthusiasms over such monumental native arts as are promulgated by Al Jolson and the artist who draws "Krazy Kat." Jazz and the movies, proclaims this modernistic energumen, are high art. And who knows—perhaps he is right. But if he is, then the mechanic who made radio possible (and impossible) is a greater man than Shakespeare. At any rate, M. Seldes is a diverting writer, and his opinions have no dust upon them. "The Seven Lively Arts" is quite worthy your attention—if you like that sort of thing.

John Joyce's Complex by Emma M. Scheer

Showing the Mild Mannered Henry Involved in Adventure and Revealing What Happened When He Opened His Eyes

THE thing began with a blinding glare and a crash. Newell's roadster left the road and turned over. He flew clear, struck a fence post, and lay in the grass. He never knew how long he was there in the soft silence of the summer night; he seemed to soar interminably, and finally opened his eyes in the darkness. He raised his hand and felt the barbed wire above him.

"Barrage?" he questioned dazedly and waited. There was no sound of life about him. He rose dizzily, hanging to the post, with a sick feeling in the pit of his stomach. Things looked misty as in a dream.

Newell stumbled forward and his foot struck something hard. He picked it up curiously. A crank from his tool box! It must have smashed things up pretty well to have thrown that way out here! He saw the bulk of the damaged car lying in the ditch. He had a feeling of desperation, of uncontrollable rage. Then an unknown sensation of strength and lightness came to him, filled him. He stood up, slim and straight, his thin hair dark with blood, and his eyes wide and bright.

A wide flare of light swept the road and, feeling like an avenger, he stepped lightly into the path of a touring car bearing swiftly down upon him. The matted hair hung over his eyes, his coat was torn, and from under his arm the small round end of the crank protruded.

The big car came on, honking furiously. He felt no fear. A swift elation at an opposition held him, and with an oath the driver jammed on his brakes, the car slowed from the road, and a big man glared out into the darkness. The engine hummed, and Newell sprang on the running board, grasping the wheel and gazing wildly up at the driver.

The familiar face of Joyce, his president, seemed to fill him with unbounded joy.

"Joyce, you damned old villain!" he crowed. "Hands up!" and he poked Joyce with the end of the auto crank.

"Road bandits," occurred to the raging Joyce, who, failing to recognize his wild assailant, struggled for the wheel. Newell climbed over the door into the car, clinging and clawing furiously. His peals of mirth and futile efforts incensed the big banker, who made a vicious lunge at him. Seeing the danger spark in Joyce's eye, Newell brought the heavy crank down upon his crown, sharply and finally, once, twice! Joyce grasped at the instrument with an effort and slid heavily down on his side. Newell eyed the victim oddly.

"Ugly old devil!" he announced to the night air.

A smothered cry made him glance into the rear of the car. A woman huddled in the most remote corner, vainly trying to hide herself beneath an auto robe. Newell stepped along the running board, pulled the robe away, and flung it from the car. He looked keenly at the shrinking figure and remarked:

"And you're not his wife, either. You're only a redheaded, ugly old woman painted up! Red as an apple, by the Lord! If you were washed you'd look sixty, anyway!"

The woman was staring, and leaning forward she handed back, "You lie! And I'll bet you've killed the old man, too!"

"Killed him!" returned Newell. "Not that old bird! Tough as they make 'em! Now, out you go, old lady!"

"I'm not old!"

"Then you're young enough to walk!" said Newell triumphantly.

There was a sharp scuffle which left his painted friend beside the road, invoking the wrath of the gods upon the little man, who grasped the wheel and sped joyfully on. As he drove furiously into the residence district a policeman on the night beat signaled him to stop, and with a "Cheese it!" he stepped on the gas. Old Joyce was crushed down, hanging half off and half on the seat beside him.

"Darned old nuisance!" quoth Newell, peering out along the street. "I'll drop him here. Must be near his place."

He stopped at the curb, opened the car door, and pulled at the unconscious Joyce until he rolled out of the car an dlay on the grass.

"So long, old chap! Sorry to leave you!" and he sped away, but not before the police in pursuit had booked his license number.

Around various corners, half puzzled, he drove and drew up at his own door.

"The same old light, by heck!" he remarked grimly, "and me nearly forty. Damme! The old girl needs some sense!"

HE went into the house noisily and banged the door, encountering the belligerent Molly in the hall. This was just what he most desired.

Before she could voice her indignation at his late arrival, he broke forth abusively, "Up so late, you old hen! No wonder you are so crabbed all day. Never again! I'll be damned if a sister of mine is going to tell me when to come in any more! Next time I'll throw a rock through the window at that old headlight, too!"

Her protests at his attack were drowned in a surge of fear and tenderness.

"Your head!" she gasped, holding on to the stair post. "You're bleeding!"

"Nothing to it!" answered her brother. "That's the wine of life flowing. Now, my dear," he continued gently and confidently, "I've stolen a nice big car—always wanted one—I'm going out to rob a bank for the upkeep of the thing, and I'm goin' to rob a house and bring you a nice diamond necklace from a beautiful blue eyed girl. I may bring the girl right along with the necklace! Some girl! O, boy!" he added, thrusting his clenched fist heavenward in enthusiasm.

Molly slumped down on the lower step, sobbing wildly.

"Newell, Newell, you've been drinking!"

"Drinking!" he sneered at her scornfully. "Drinking! Think I'd be fool enough to drink with so much real fun going on?"

Molly continued to cry, turning up a stained face accusingly. "O, and for twenty-five years I've been so careful of you."

"Sure, darling, you have!" smiled Newell, reaching for an old cap which he dragged down over his matted locks, "and I have all that fun cooked up in the little old system. I've got to get everything I've ever wanted in one night!"

The door banged behind him. Molly could barely support herself to the glass panel, pressing her anxious face to it as she watched the red of the tail light disappear down the street.

Newell had his destination clearly in mind, but his attention was suddenly distracted. There stood Clancy on the corner! Clancy was on a night beat now. Poor Clancy! Just like himself. Always on a beat, horrid monotony year after year, with no fun. His heart yearned over Clancy and he drew up and hailed him.

"Jump in, old timer; we're going to have some fun!"

"My heaven, Mr. Newell!" gasped the astonished officer. "An' you a bank cashier almost, sir. You'd better go home, sir!"

His tone was conciliatory, but it acted like oil on a flame.

"Coward!" thrust the little man. "All of you! A rotten force, I'll say. Now, me! I've killed a man and stolen his car. I'm going to rob his bank and his house, and steal his daughter!"

During this speech Clancy had straightened up in a fury, but then he nearly collapsed in amazement.

"Now, Mr. Newell!" he began, used to these night riding gentlemen and their fairy tales.

"You don't believe me, old man? Can't you see I'm using Joyce's car? I threw him in the street, and the lady friend he had with him is out enjoying nature beside the starlit road." He laughed at the recurrence of the vision.

Clancy's mind came to attention.

"Now, Clancy," the chief had said when Clancy was standing in the glory of his first uniform, "close your eyes to the queer things the leading citizens do. They pay high taxes, and sure 'tis their privilege to enjoy the town as long as they don't damage things. If there's damage, they settle it between themselves. Give them plenty of rope. Take them home when they can't navigate. Make no trouble with the commissioners for me. If the public must have police court news, we will just give them the list of old offenders once a week. No mistakes, now!" This last with a threatening forefinger.

To Clancy this had become a sort of religion, and many an uncertain foot had he guided, and many a wild tail had he put the proverbial salt upon. So he had come to consider himself discreet in his judgments. The scathing voice of the chief he had ceased to dread, and his conceit in his own deductions went beyond the point of safety.

Newell was trying to carry his point.

"Now, listen, Clancy. I'll divide the swag. I don't need all that we're going to get. Clancy," he added in a dead level tone, "you were a crook once, I believe. Your face shows it!"

Clancy paled.

"Yes, siree! If the truth were known! You are only out upon your honor, and honor among thieves; you know how it is! I'm no piker! We'll give the old burg a jolt. It needs it! Been dead too long!"

Still Clancy meditated as to the best course to pursue. He dreaded arresting a prominent citizen and to be bitterly censured by the chief for not using his head. He would undoubtedly be the joke of the force for weeks if Newell proved to be "plain drunk." Still, here was a man bloody and disheveled, in a car apparently not his own, proudly telling him that it was but the beginning of a series of crimes, one more desperate than the other, still to be committed. If Newell did these things, and Clancy allowed him to after being fairly warned, then Clancy was out of a job, that was one sure thing. Never was a man in a tighter place. So to settle the case in his mind he thought it best to follow it up a bit, and apparently cheerfully accepted Newell's invitation to "hop in." Newell immediately drove on down to the business district and stopped his car at the corner above the bank, well in the shadow. An alley cut into the block behind the bank and the other business houses, and a narrow space between the bank and the next building led directly into this alley. Newell had parked the car near the entrance to the alley. Clancy and he got out of the car and went along the front of the bank.

"Now, Clancy," instructed Newell, "you stand at the front entrance and watch me. You can see through the plate door. If any one comes, you whistle. Then I'll beat it. You walk along easy, and I'll pick you up in the next block!"

IT all sounded too simple to Clancy and, still puzzled, he pondered a few seconds. Newell had slid into the narrow open space next to the bank and had disappeared. Clancy finally approached the big beveled plate doors and peered into the long, beautiful entrance of the bank. The night watchman had just walked the full length of the interior and was approaching the door. He noticed a shadow on the glass and glanced in sudden panic. Then he came closer and smiled out in relief at Patrolman Clancy. They passed a few remarks off hand, and the watchman lingered about the door. Clancy was finally starting to walk away, disgusted with the tiresome affair, when he saw the watchman jump, turn about, and run back into the building. He heard a defiant cry and then the hum of a motor. He turned about and ran up to the corner where they had both left the car. A car was slipping along in the darkness.

"Newell!" yelled Clancy. "Mr. Newell, is that you?"

He received no answer and, calling himself a fool for his trip, he returned to the bank slowly. The state of Clancy's mind became difficult to describe. He called Newell a fool, and had just decided that Newell had driven off for a joke, leaving him to get back to his beat somehow but in a hurry, when he heard voices coming from the side of the building and trotted faster. The watchman had run out of an open door in the rear and was calling hysterically and wringing his hands.

"Mr. Clancy! My God, sir, the safe has been robbed—in just the few moments I was talking to you!"

"An' me an accomplice, by the Lord!" thought Clancy, frozen to a miserable silence. Clancy needed time to adjust his thoughts and to decide on just the words with which to tell the chief how innocent he was of all wrongdoing, and how good his motives were in accompanying Newell. He tried to quiet the watchman, rang up the station, and reported the theft, giving simply the statement made by the watchman. He hoped everyone would overlook the little fact that it was he himself who was talking to the watchman while the robber, evidently familiar with the whole layout, made such a swift getaway. He must protect himself! This was his first thought. If he openly accused Newell, Newell would testify that he, Clancy, had come along with a full understanding of what was going to be done and, furthermore, he had ridden to the scene of the crime in a car which he knew to be stolen!

Clancy grasped his fool head in both hands and rocked in anguish of mind and body. He went directly to the station. He hoped to get his bearings in more familiar territory. He sat miserably in a chair studying the floor for counsel, while the watchman told his tale to the amazed lieutenant in trembling tones. Of course the watchman's story did not implicate Clancy. He simply saw him through the door, both men apparently alone. The telephone at the lieutenant's elbow buzzed at the climax of this recital and a woman's voice called hurriedly:

"Help! Help! My jewels—robbers—come!"

The service was cut off. The officer called the operator, who answered finally, "Joyce, I think. The line's out of order now."

Clancy got an idea out of chaos. "Has Joyce a daughter?"

"Has he? I'll say he has?" exclaimed Sarles of the night force, who just "breezed in" and caught the question. "I'm here to report a little matter right now. I came upon Joyce lying dead drunk on the curb, happy and silent, me lads.. I dragged him in and handed him over to the prettiest pair of blue eyes its ever been my misfortune to see. And I have the number of a fine speeder for the court in the morning!" he added, running through the leaves of his memorandum book. "Look this up, will you, Mack? I can't rest until I know the divil's name!"

The officer glanced down the license number list.

"26,284? Why, man, that's old Joyce's car!"

Clancy was electrified. "Then lead me to Joyce's!" he demanded.

FOUR men piled into the auto and sped on their way. So Newell was going ahead! He had spoken truthfully. Left the banker and his lady beside the road! Stolen his car! Robbed his bank! Was now taking the diamonds, perhaps even the daughter! Clancy rocked in the car as if in pain. He had always rather pitied Newell, who had been a familiar figure for years about town. He seemed a slim, quiet little man, almost a drone, back and forth at Joyce's call, trusted fully at the bank, lock, stock, and barrel. He seemed never to have an idea beyond his quiet "Yes, sir," and "No, sir." He responded meekly when old Joyce growled his commands. You never could tell about those quiet little fellows. They had it behind their ears, and he, Clancy, right up to his neck in trouble!

The car arrived at the beautiful Joyce residence. The rear, the servants' quarters, and the garage were dark, but in the front of the house both floors were flooded with a soft haze of a light cast from countless golden shaded electric lamps about the walls. The doors were unlocked. The men entered softly. All was quiet and they found no one about. They crept up the padded velvet on the stairs, Clancy well in the rear. He was not afraid, but he thought it well that Newell did not see him first. Finally voices led them to a suite of rooms furnished in gold and the gray blue of an evening sky. Soft rugs and draperies proclaimed it the retreat of a young person with a taste for luxury and the wealth to express that taste.

Now here she was, to her intense delight, in a dramatic situation clad in silken negligee and satin mules, with soft, blonde hair about her throat, standing with blue eyes gleaming with amusement, and hands up, with her back to the silken wall of her dressing room. In front of her stood a slim fellow, looking years younger than thirty-five. His pale face was lit up by a flushed spot on both cheeks, and his teeth showed white between his red lips. His black eyes danced as he swung long strands and strings of glittering things before her.

"Your father is an old crook! He's dead. I killed him! You are a fool to dance every night with chappies who care only for your money. They can't marry you because they can't support both you and themselves. Now me! I want to marry you! I'm in love with you, crazy about you! I'll give these flimsies to my old maid sister and she'll keep still. I'll marry you, and if you don't behave I'll drag you around by that lovely hair!" he finished with a fierce gesture.

Never had Jean been so well entertained. So this was Newell in an unguarded moment. If she had known when she first saw the swift shadow on the stair, she would never have called the police. Now here they were behind him! He saw her glance past him, and swung around.

"Well!" he shouted, wading into them gloriously. "I'm Santa Claus and Lochinvar and the whole darned bunch of high fliers! Come on, boys!"

His auto crank swung wickedly in the air, once, twice, and, taking no further chances, Clancy stepped up and tapped him gently on the head. As he slipped to the floor, the girl, white and scared, ran forward.

"It was a mistake! You must not take him or even touch him. We were joking; just playing. He is ill. I can see it now!" she rambled on desperately, protecting him. The men were nonplussed. Clancy took the situation in hand.

"Now, miss," he began, "this is Mr. Newell who works in your father's bank, and I used to think he was a nice, quiet, little man, but I dunno! He may hurt you, but I think he will be quiet for several hours. If your father is here by then, let him telephone us. We have no warrant and no complaint unless you make one."

The girl was crying quietly and, without looking up, she nodded.

"An', miss," added the kindly Clancy, "just you quiz him good in the morning. He may remember some surprising things. People sometimes do!" and he herded the men down and into the waiting car.

WHEN morning came, Newell opened his eyes to a dim room. The bed was wonderfully soft, the curtains were drawn, and his head ached immensely. It was swathed in an outlandish bandage. His eyes ached, his ears ached—O, how he hurt all over, so he lay still. But through his mind, as fast as the flying moments of a dream, unrolled the horrid panorama of the previous night, and then backward to the beginning of it all.

John Joyce was an outstanding figure in the business world of the town. The place had about forty thousand people, and was situated within a nice driving distance from one of the largest middle west cities. Joyce carried about with him a massive and impressive silence. He broke it to give a few curt instructions to employes, a general remark about business and the weather to his peers, and a jovial remark to his wife and daughter. These few words, nods, and a fine listening attitude got him all he wanted. Why expand and become confidential only to regret it? Why be pleasant only to allow people to impose upon you? Why encourage familiarity when by a reticent attitude you can have every one trying to please you, trying with the old and well known human failing, to elicit a nod, or a smile of recognition and a word of recompense.

It was a personal satisfaction to Joyce that he need not be cious to any one. His presidency of the bank was kept because he was president! He could control, and his fortune was variously parceled out to a number of growing industries and factories, the directors of which shrank and cajoled in turn. If he thought the thing worth while, he took a controlling interest before he assisted at the launching, and later he froze out the small stockholders. It was rather hard for many people to be beyond the far reach of that hard finger. You will find any town controlled by half a dozen men who directly influence the growth and inevitable future of the place. There are John Joyces in every town, big men to whom power has come, seemingly unsought.

Joyce's reticence concealed streaks in his character of which he was ashamed. In his home town he wanted to be the leader, and a small town knows so well the affairs of its people that he had to be consistently good. He kept up his business, social, and religious standing to the entire satisfaction of his townsfolk. Now and then the devil had his way with him, with his own indorsement. He made business trips to the city, gambled, drank, and swore abominably, leered foolishly at women who noticed him, and drank in jazz music. He scouted among Chinese restaurants, curio shops and everywhere, letting go that underthread of longing for foreign, oriental flavor in things and finding nothing but rawness and the taint of the fresh new land atmosphere.

He usually ended his weird trips by bringing back a beautiful little rug which he threw on the floor beside his chair near the fireplace. Then he would gaze on it long and hungrily, trying to draw from the glowing silken thing the secret of its odd design and the dreams of the one who wove its shimmering loveliness. Perhaps he bought a softly colored Chinese vase for the mantel and let the cloud of dreams descend upon him. Would he dare let his little world know when his particular little devil poked him? He would not. So he was densely silent. And it was well for him that he was so. His wife had become flattened out during her twenty years with him. Her hair had become thin and docile, her eyes faded and meek, and her figure flattened like her character. She thought John a walking wonder, and showed it in every glance and in every little attention. She worried over his occasional trips which left him morose for days, and thought it so good of him to bring home some little present, remembering them even in the midst of his rush of business. His daughter, Jeanie, with the keenness of youth, felt there was something amiss, but she could not put her finger on the trouble. She saw that her father's gaze on the last little rug which lay like a great crimson rose before him was not one of business distraction, but of complete absorption.

"Play, Jean, something easy," he would say, and she would sit in front of the little grand piano in the corner, and run softly through some odd melodies that he liked. Her honey colored hair lay softly over her forehead, and was drawn in little puffs near her ears. Her lacy dress, transparent about the collar and sleeves, showed the white skin, and her silken stockings and beautiful little shoes always helped somehow. He loved her dearly and devotedly, and he was afraid of her. He knew that if any one ever found him out, it would be his blue eyed baby who laughed daringly at his commands. There was a curious keenness in the azure depths of those eyes, a thrustlike glance at the inner man, when the outer man spoke, an appraising, disquieting quality that gave Joyce many uneasy moments and made more and more firm his order that his darling daughter should find all of her entertainment and pleasure in her little own home town.

"Your father is an old crook! He's dead. I killed him! I want to marry you!"

JOYCE was really a fair sort of man, but his conceit was colossal. He longed desperately for a good time, travel in far lands, where he could gather the things he loved at the source of the supply, but his business interests were so varied, and of such a nature that he thought no one could manage his affairs with any show of intelligence, no one, at least, whom he knew. One man had the wit, but no prudence, a bad combination, and all the prudent men he had in his employ had no energy of purpose, which made a poor excuse of a business man. He himself was competent and efficient to a degree. He recognized none of these traits in any one in his employ. Quite at a variance with this attitude toward a possible manager, he also wanted a handy man, some quiet, ineffectual sort of person to whom he could hand his keys and purse if necessary, and receive them intact again. Just something, metaphorically speaking, upon whom he could throw his clothes or hang his hat for convenience. Blinded by the light of his own opinion of himself, he could not find the big man to manage his affairs and give him freedom, but he did, he thought, find the small man. He selected Henry Newell as a harmless specimen, and hung on to him endless small duties, trifling facts that were the core of his success, countless items that spelled the gist of his endeavor, until the boy, after ten years of drilling, became cognizant to the facts of his inmost business life, and knew in a disinterested way that Joyce's lapses and trips to the city had nothing whatever to do with the matters in hand.

Joyce imposed upon him in such a way that Newell could not resent it without a walkout. He could think of no other position for a man of his age and training, and doggedly bent to the punishment. Joyce advanced his salary now and then in line with an accepted policy toward all of his employes. Newell knew, however, that no advance would ever relieve him from the pressure of that great thumb. There was just one panacea for all of his ills. That was one smile from Jean Joyce when she came in occasionally to see her father. It made him thankful that he was alive to do John Joyce's bidding. It made his blood race, tied his tongue, and left only the dark velvet of his imploring eyes asking her to smile again. And he dreamed his dreams as John Joyce dreamed his, and they were apparently as impossible of fulfillment.

Newell had served John Joyce, banker, business man, millionaire, and deacon in the church for ten years without missing a day; a record which would surely take its toll sometime, somewhere. At home he was mothered jealously and peevishly by Molly, a sister, twenty years his senior. Newell felt that Molly was wrong on plenty of subjects, but why wrangle or worry, when she did not interfere with his nearest and dearest treasures, which, thank heaven, she never suspected him of having? Why care if she insisted upon keeping the house so cold in winter that he had to put on a sweater coat and fur lined slippers to have any sort of comfort while reading the evening paper? Over the top of the paper led a path into sunshine, blue skies printed with gay little sunset clouds, hanging above paths in the green woodland, paths which were bordered with clusters of daisies and violets. Among the trees sang nightingales, and the air was sweet with a thousand odors and the hand he held was warm, and the voice that he heard was sweeter than any music, woodland or otherwise. You can walk like this even if you are bundled in an old armchair, with your feet in fur lined slippers. And if you have time enough before the respectable bedtime alloted to you, you may also see yourself seated magnificently in a president's chair, looking in lofty criticism at the documents presented for your signature.

If I have freedom in my love
And in my soul am free,
Angels alone that soar above
Enjoy such liberty.

One cold winter night Newell was enjoying himself at Molly's side when the telephone rang vigorously. Molly disentangled herself to answer it, and became lost in a maze of instructions. She called Henry. In two minutes Henry had the idea. Mr. Joyce was entertaining a board of directors at a dinner party, and later during a sociable smoke an argument had arisen over a certain list of securities held by the bank as collateral for a loan to the Broadland Manufacturing company.

Henry had the key to the side door of the bank. He was to go to Mr. Joyce's desk and retrieve therefrom the aforesaid list, and bring it to Joyce's home as soon as possible. Even Molly blazed up at this. Such a night! A shame! What would he do? To her amazement Newell turned from the telephone, eyes shining and face lit up.

"Why," he countered, "he probably wants to put himself right with those fellows. Why, yes, Molly, it's really no trouble at all!"

And after an elaborate inspection in the little hall mirror he hied forth happily. Molly relapsed, shaking her head. Henry had no spunk at all!

Newell delivered the envelope to a servant and sat awaiting instructions in a high backed carved chair in the hall. Gray toned walls were all about him, old blue rugs, deep and silken beneath his feet, and a soft golden haze fell from a light above him. He sat happily looking at the home in which a fairy dwelt, and then, because there is a recompense, a justice, a balance sometimes to this thing called living, the fairy descended the stairs, light feet in silver slippers, a gown like tender little waves edged with foam, and, O, rapture! She smiled divinely. Can a heart spill over? Henry's did. He was speechless and helpless. The fairy came near and he knew her of old. He had heard her dear, sweet voice, and had held her soft little hand. He must, he must take a chance, but all he accomplished was a little bow and a hungry, wistful smile.

Miss Jean laughed a little secret laugh, inquired about his errand, and then led him into the room of the twinkling fire and the baby grand piano. Here they both lost track of time and place, and just talked about the things they did, and loved, and dreamed. Parker, the butler, not finding Newell in the hall after Joyce had scanned the list reassuringly, returned the paper to the master, who was much incensed at the behavior of his minion. They all thought he had left, and he did, two hours later, when he came to the surface and realized the lateness of the hour. They continued to talk while he was leaving, and he bowed himself out in such elation that he completely forgot the list, the weather, and all else, appearing before the anxious Molly, coat open, head up. He was a different brother from the one who was usually so mild.

NEWELL had no further opportunity to talk to Miss Joyce, but he caught sight of her in the bank several times, and they exchanged mysterious smiles. There was a bond of sympathy between them. Never had the girl talked with any one with similar tastes and ideals. Newell's education had been supplemented by good reading, interesting lectures, introspection, and by following several good leads he had at various times, had interesting hobbies. Jean Joyce had come from college with the idea of enjoying herself, and had attended the infrequent dancing parties of her set, golfed, bridged, and spent several years in finding out that there was nothing else to do, she could only do the same things over again. She had her mother's features and coloring, supplemented by her father's energy and taste, the whole lit up with the fires of his longing for new and interesting things. She had catalogued her dancing partners and all of the eligible men in town, and she usually knew precisely their line of conversation, and had her answers prepared in amusement at their approach.

Here was a new character. A polite, pleasant voiced person, lacking in affrontery and braggadoccio, as she had often met them. Here was one apparently of her own kind of people, who had gathered interesting material from the apparently mediocre surroundings. He was also good to look at, and when he became enthusiastic with some particular subject he showed his latent possibilities.

One day Jean Joyce hung thin, golden silk curtains in the window where the spring sunshine fell upon her box of tulips. Her father, held by the glow in their folds, came up to her and kissed her. She spoke softly.

"Dad, are you going to advance Mr. Newell soon?"

"Soon? O, I don't know," absently responded her father. "He's a hopeless character. No pep! Never has an idea! Jean," he added in intense interest, motioning to first the yellow curtains and then at the dark, polished floor at his feet where the shaft of light fell. "I'll get a Mossoul or a Kermanshah. Ha! I know the thing. We'll put it just here where the yellow light falls. Girl, it will warm the heart!"

"Father, your imagination will carry you away!" laughed Jean, holding fast to his arm and rubbing her head on his shoulder.

Life had been smooth for months, and Joyce's old desires lit up again. He wished he could wrap a mantle of mysticism about him. He longed for the smell of incense and the long note, holding and piercing through some monotonous din of temple music. This time he would live up to his ideals when he went away. No driking and no playing, he decided, but he longed with a vast, unconquerable longing for a new, strange environment. He wanted to submerge himself. He hoped for satiety so he might come back to the commonplace business of his life with a quiet, clear mind. It was June in the northland, green, warm, and fragrant, however, before he could venture a little trip to Chicago. He went into a number of shops, looked through hundreds of dim colored rugs of questionable value and origin, climbed rickety stairs to little rooms where the wares were strewn about the floor, rugs in bales and bundles in the corners, thrown over ropes and boxes for display. He exhausted the possibility of every place before he finally went to old Melos, with whom he invariably dealt.

Melos was foreign, as evidenced by his long brown beak and dark eyes, and smiling, ingratiating manner. He heightened the foreign effect by wearing a red fez and a silk sash, and by using French expletives on occasion.

Joyce watched Melos spread the gorgeous display before him, and the pile was deep before he decided upon his Mossoul with a dull background, having a light pattern which would look as if a hidden treasure had been strewn over it when the sun shone through the golden curtains. But it almost happened that John Joyce did not see that sunlight shine upon his new acquisition. Melos had an underground traffic in many wares which were used to supplement the rug trade, and he made use of any means to further his business. Joyce had been in the shop so often he always carried his new treasures away in his big car, and Melos knew the trip was a short one and that the time better than that made by the train. While Melos was tenderly wrapping up the rug, he stopped suddenly and, leaning dramatically over the parcel, said quickly:

"You go back now, tonight?"

"Yes," said Joyce.

"Then," with finality, "you take Marie, a woman I know. Mus' go now! Leave her on edge of town. Pleasant street, second house. You know where!"

Joyce held up his hands in violent protest, but Melos disappeared behind a nearby curtain and reappeared, leading a woman who had evidently seen better days. She was elaborately dressed and painted with an unnecessary brillaince. Joyce was intensly disgusted and argued explosively with the Turk, but this gentleman was in the habit of having his way, and the more Joyce argued the more insistent he became, and then veered suddenly in his tactics and said softly with a leer:

"Rug coming soon! Call 'Flame of th' Orient,' most magnificent! My friend may have it for a song!"

Joyce was mollified and grudgingly gave assent.

"Put the woman in the back with the rug. I'll drop her where you say!" he said.

Then he swung his powerful car out on the gray ribbon of the highway. Gradually they left the sparkling city lights behind. They rushed through the farm country, through little dozing towns toward home. And thus he met Henry Newell, standing hatless, wounded, brain-befuddled, straight in his path.

THE one big relief, the one redeeming feature of the whole affair, Jean told Newell, was that her mother providentially stayed with Aunt Nellie all night. Aunt Nellie had had a nervous breakdown. Mrs. Joyce came in about nine o'clock in the morning and said that Nellie was much improved. Jean told her that her father and Mr. Newell had been bumped in a little accident, but that father had had a few stitches in his dear scalp and that the doctor had said that when Newell woke after a good sleep he would probably be all right. A slight concussion of the brain, with a nervous reaction. And, blessed thought, no one knew anything definite but Clancy, and he did not know all. And Jean was going to be so good to Clancy and all the little Clancies that he would soon forget. Mrs. Joyce went up to Jewell's room in anxious solicitude, while Jean and her father stood in the library and talked.

"Now, my girl," said Joyce in conclusion, "how does it look to you?"

"It sounds perfectly all right to me, because I know you and believe you, but it stops with me. No other human being would believe a word of it, and you'll be absolutely ruined if it gets out!"

"Yes, but I'd never seen the woman before!" countered her father.

"No one will believe it! She was absolutely awful?"

"Worse than that!" This disconsolately.

"O, dad! Keep it dark forever! And, dearest, here's the load of cash that came from the bank!" She laughed.

"Daughter! Are you going to drive a bargain with me?"

"I am, dear heart, and I know how to do it! I am my father's own daughter!"

At this point Mrs. Joyce came smilingly down the stairs and entered the room.

"It seems that young man is quite himself again. He's a nice, quiet person," she said, cheerfully.

"Quiet!" exclaimed her family in unison.

"Pleasant and polite," added the lady.

"He speaks of leaving, but we won't hear of it until tomorrow. I know his sister. One of the best workers in our Ladies' Aid society. He says things are becoming more clear to him all the time. I hope that by tomorrow he will be able to tell me all that happened to him!"

"Heaven forbid!" groaned the desperate Joyce to himself, casting an imploring look at Jean, who rose and went immediately up to the invalid's room, smiling a little secret smile.

Newell had awakened, and he stayed awake so well that two months later the four sat again near the twinkling fire, Jean in a chair drawn close to her husband. Father Joyce was increasingly restless.

Finally he remarked, "I can't tell whether those devils sell me real orientals or not!"

"Likely as not they are made over here in New Jersey!" volunteered his prosperous looking son-in-law. Newell was leaning back, blowing rings of smoke toward the ceiling, at which he smiled.

"Just that, Henry!" he answered; "and I hate to be fooled in a thing that I enjoy having as I do these rugs."

"No way to find out for sure?" asked Newell, who knew perfectly well what his father-in-law was leading up to. Joyce became tense in his absorbtion, and his eyes glowed in anticipation.

"The only way is to go to the east, India, Turkey, through Asia Minor, the old, old shops!" he answered.

"Then just go, John," said his wife, placidly. "Henry and Jean will stay with me for a year They are going to plan their own home meanwhile. I would not think of going to those awful places! And, John," she continued, "if you find these rugs are not authentic, may we auction them for our charity work?"

"Bless your heart, yes!"

"Now, Newell," continued he in a friendly way, "I guess you have inside information on every deal I've had on for the last ten years. Things are looking up, There's good times ahead! Factories are working overtime. The fact is," he finished, seriously, "you can run my business as well as I can. I've waited years for a chance and I'd like to take a year off for travel!"

"Make it two years!" suggested the generous Newell, "and I'll wager you'll be thankful you have only five senses when you get playing about with your oriental friends. You will be mighty glad to come back to clean beds, clean food, and the straight American way of doing business. You have had this complex for so long that nothing will cure you except an overdose of foreign parts, musty shops, beggars, and camels, and bad drinking water!"

"And, father," smiled Jean Newell, "will you, if you find it, bring back the 'Flame of the Orient' to me?"

Don't Envy Me

Youth and beauty are at your command

By Edna Wallace Hopper

I made myself a famous beauty. For 35 years as a stage star I have played a beauty's part. I have kept that beauty. At a grandmother's age I retain my youthful bloom.

I owe this to four great beauty helps, perfected by French experts. They form, I believe, the greatest beauty helps in existence. They have brought to many of my friends just what they brought to me. I am convinced that millions can obtain like benefits from them. So I am now placing these supreme helps at every woman's call.

White Youth Clay

One is my White Youth Clay. Not like the crude and muddy clays so many still employ. This is a superclay, white, refined and dainty—perfected by 20 years of scientific study. Its results will amaze and delight you.

Youth Clay purges the skin of all that clogs or mars it. It revives the skin—makes it clear and rosy. It firms the skin, combats all lines and wrinkles, reduces enlarged pores. It multiplies one's beauty. And my girlish complexion shows how it keeps one's youth.

Many women seem to drop ten years with one application of White Youth Clay. The cost is 50c and $1.

Two Master Creams

My Youth Cream is my cold cream. It contains products of both strawberry and lemon, also all the best that science knows to foster the fine texture of the skin.

I apply it after the clay. Also as a night cream, also daytimes as a powder base. Never is my skin without it. In all my world-wide search I never found another cream which brings comparable results. The price is 60 cents.

My Facial Youth is a liquid cleanser which I found in France. It contains no animal, no vegetable fat. The skin cannot absorb it. So it cleans to the depths, then departs. All the refuse, all the dirt and grime come out with it. No other method leaves the skin so clean.

The greatest beauty experts now advise this cleanser, but they charge $3 for it. My Facial Youth costs 75c.

My Hair Youth

My hair is my chief glory. It is heavy, silky, lustrous, and grows finer every year. I have never known dandruff, falling hair or gray hair. The reason lies in my Hair Youth. It is based on lifetimes of hair study. I apply it with an eye dropper, directly to the scalp. There it combats the hardened oil and dandruff which stifle the hair roots. It stimulates and fertilizes. My luxuriant hair shows what that means, both to men and women. My Hair Youth costs 50c and $1.

All druggists and toilet counters now supply Edna Wallace Hopper's products. So all who wish may now enjoy these matchless beauty helps. Try one and you will use them all. Go now and learn how much they mean to you. With each one comes my Beauty Book and a guarantee. Edna Wallace Hopper, 536 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago.

The Affair at Othman's by Will Payne

INSTALLMENT XIV.

Kendall Finds the Jewels.

KENDALL met Flora with a wry smile, for the situation twisted his heart and brain. By lowering their voices they could speak without being overheard, but an officer was present, busy at a desk in the corner. Welbasky had thought it well to keep that stern symbol of reality before her eyes.

"They let me see you again," Kendall began with a sort of aimless haste when they were seated. "They're going ahead. I've tried again, but got nothing for you."

"My lawyer has been here," she told him. "He thinks I ought to say I shot in self-defense."

Kendall swallowed. "That's Welbasky's idea."

Her eyes questioned him an instant before her low voice pronounced it: "Do you think I should, Phil?"

It seemed to leave it with him. The same question had been in his mind when he entered. He felt no moral recoil from it, but frowned at her in a hot and sullen rebellion.

"I don't know. There's no right about your being here; there's no right anywhere any more. You're innocent, but it piles up against you, loading the dice. You're entitled to get out any way you can." But as he stared at her every charming lineament and the grace of her pose blent in an image of inner truth which must not be disfigured, and he declared, "No! You can't do it! It wouldn't be true!"

"It wouldn't be true," she murmured back, and there was a little silence; then she stooped toward him, her hands folded together as though each sought comfort from the other, her voice dropping to an intimate thread between them, barely audible. "I'm awfully afraid, Phil. They're going to put the charge—of murder—against me tomorrow. I know how hard you've tried; but, as you say, it all piles up so. Maybe they're going to get me. My lawyer thinks they are—unless I say I shot in self-defense, or stop contradicting Nelly about the door. I think people are got that way sometimes, everything piles up against them, all the circumstances. Of course, I hate it. I started wrong, but it oughtn't to be as bad as this for me. If I could go back and do it over." But that attempt to end on a light note did not succeed; her eyes suddenly blurred with tears; two rolled down her cheeks. She put up her fingers to wipe them away and gave a dolorous little laugh. "I didn't mean to do that."

Her tears put him beside himself, and he saw the affair as only a monstrous, unbearable joke, quite detached from good and evil. In the wrench and twist of that errant thought, which had once flitted in his mind and to which he had hardly given heed, flew in and took possession.

"They're not going to get you!" he affirmed. "They can't put it over, Flora! It's not to be endured! Nobody is required to endure it!" He made a vague little gesture. "They—the thing that's after you, whatever it is, has had everything its own way so far. But it's not going to have everything its own way. You're innocent, Flora. It's only a joke—grotesque. There's no right or wrong about it any more. It's not going to get you. Nobody is required to endure that. You have that letter I wrote you Friday?"

THE outburst, all the more disturbing since it was made under his breath, struck her with an indefinite alarm. His set jaw and the round eyes with which he stared at her seemed strangely unlike to him; she felt the heat and tumult in his brain; something twisted and desperate here. There seemed to be little sense in his question.

With wondering, watchful eyes upon his face, she shook her head and answered mechanically, "No, I burned it."

He frowned with impatient disappointment and said, reprovingly, "You should have kept it. But no matter." Urging the point as though it were important, he added, "But you remember it? You could repeat what it said?"

"O, yes; I remember. But why do you ask about it, Phil? What's that got to do with it now?"

He avoided the question, rubbing his brows and muttering, "No matter now. Of course, it's no great matter. Only you must remember it. It might be important later."

The thought that had once flitted errantly in his mind and now came in to take possession was this: The woman witness was going to convict Flora; but he had written her a desperate letter about Othman, showing that he was in love with her and wildly jealous. So he could say that on that fatal Friday night he had put a pearl handled, nickel plated, six chambered revolver in his pocket, and gone up to settle with Othman; arriving at the house, he saw some policemen entering and knew something had happened, and tucked his revolver down in the corner of the driveway and then went up to the door and spoke to Sergeant Ferguson. His reputation was good; his oath, however false, would stand against that of the woman witness.

And Flora, with watchful, wondering, apprehensive eyes, was recalling what he had said to her Sunday about thinking and thinking till one's head got in a stew—especially if one's heart were on the rack, too. Her intuitions said that he was revolving some desperate and reckless scheme.

"You've something in your mind, Phil. If I thought you were likely to start wrong, I should have to cry again." The tremulous little smile seemed not far from it. "I'm the wrongdoer. I'm like Nelly Barlow."

That, in its way, was unbearable, too, and he blurted, "You! You, Flora! As like as day to night! I'm not going wrong. I was wild about you when I wrote that letter. The letter shows it. I was off my head."

The glimpse of some desperate scheme showed more clearly there. Wild men shot those of whom they were jealous.

She must not let that go on, and tried a flank attack: "If you were wild about me, why didn't you tell me so?"

He answered promptly, "I had no right. That, too, put me off my head, you see." He gave a nod. "But I have a right now; a right to do everything necessary for you. They're not going to put it over! It's a joke, with no right or wrong about it. Nobody's required to stand a thing like this."

He would not say what she wanted to hear—obstinate. But this had come so close that the thing fairly said itself; and, with a full and thrilling heart, she comprehended how young and tormented he was, beside himself on account of her.

"BUT you mustn't start wrong," she pleaded; then looked down, her hands making a restless little motion in her lap, and added, "We must talk it over. I haven't told you yet what happened when Nelly Barlow came to see me. I'll tell you now."

In the effort of telling it coherently and candidly, a line came in her forehead and she screwed up her lips. "I got your letter Friday and sent for Nelly. He was fond of me as I was of him; I'd known him all my life. I showed him the letter and begged him to tell me the truth. Poor Nelly broke down and told me all about it." With that she looked up, appearing to intercede for the suicide.

"It was terribly sad and shocking. He'd embezzled and forged, and Othman held it over him and promised him money. So Nelly went to work for him to fool me and my father and mother, telling him what to say and do in order to make us think he was honorable and magnanimous and slandered. When you think of Nelly, not really wanting to hurt anybody, so bright, so many laughs, and fond of me, too . . . All he wanted was to play around in the sun—soft and light, I suppose. I told him I'd never tell anybody; and I wouldn't, only he's dead.

"For one thing, he told about that girl up in Maine. They worked out a plot to make me think my father was her father and Othman was protecting us from a scandal. That would make me feel awfully indebted to him, in an intimate way. It did; it had a good deal to do with my consenting to an engagement; gave him that kind of intimacy, you see; in a way, standing even closer than my father. Nelly even stole an old photograph of my father out of the house and gave it to that woman who had the girl so she could show it to you and make you think my father was the girl's father. It was a terrible thing to do, when all the while Nelly was really fond of us and doubted that my father was her father."

"He's not her father," Kendall interposed, and related what Marsden had told him.

"Nelly suspected it was something like that," she resumed; "yet he helped Othman work the plot. And that, Phil, is partly why I wouldn't say I shot in self-defense. I'm too much like Nelly—wanting to play around in the sunlight and foolish. I felt if I started telling lies I'd get all tangled up in them, as he did. You know where he ended. I was afraid of that for myself, for I'm too much like him."

Again he repudiated that idea. "O, no, Flora! No!"

She shook her head. "O, yes I am! For I haven't told you yet. You kept away from our house a long while. I knew well enough why you were keeping away. You thought I'd set my heart on a rich marriage. And it's true; I had. When you kept away I said I was fond of you as a friend, but you weren't eligible, so it was just as well that you did keep away; or sometimes I'd be piqued and say if you didn't care enough about it to try, I was quite willing to call it quits. I played a game with myself, and made myself believe it. I played a game with myself about Othman, too, even when I thought he was honorable. I looked at the money and what he could give me and my people.

"Yet I did hold off for a long while, Phil. But I saw no more of you; and then came this affair of the girl from Maine when it seemed Othman was protecting my family in that intimate way. Then he said you struck him, gave him a beating, on account of his attentions to me. I was furious at you for it and full of sympathy with him; it came all of a sudden when I was wrought up over that, and I said yes to him.

"And then, in half an hour, I knew it was all wrong. You see, Phil, that yes, when I came to realize what it meant, blew away all the makebelieve and fraud, and I knew; I knew I'd tangled myself up in fraud and lies and spoiled my life. I knew I loved somebody else. At first I thought I could get out of it, put Othman off some way. But he went straight to my father and made some money arrangements; and I saw I was committed to it, caught. So I said very well, I'd carry it through honor bright though it killed me. Often it's like that; once you let yourself in and are caught, it doesn't let go.

"WHEN I got your letter, that terrible letter, like a blow in my face from your fist. No one else could have written such a letter, smash in my face. And I knew why it was so desperate, like stabbing me; I knew how much you must have cared. It shook me all through. That's why I was distracted. When Nelly read the letter I told him it was you I loved. I shed tears over it. If Othman was an honorable man, who really loved me and to whom I had given my word, no doubt I must go through with it, if it killed me. But I begged Nelly to tell me the truth, for if that letter was at all true it would be monstrous for me to marry Othman. That's why I was distracted." She was looking at him steadily, and he stared back at her. There was an officer over in the corner of the room, constraining their actions if not their words.

"I started wrong with Othman," she went on. "This some way comes out of it. If you begin wrong, you're apt to get tangled up hopelessly. Maybe they're going to get me. Except I thought so, perhaps I shouldn't have told you this, for you ought to do the telling. But O, Phil! you musn't get started wrong. You're not that kind. You're downright and straight. Because you're distracted about me now you mustn't begin the other way. It'll do no good, and only ruin you. It was always the beautiful thing about you that you were downright and straight. Your head's in a stew now over me; but you mustn't. Don't, Phil; please don't!" Her lips trembled and her eyes again glistened with tears.

The officer in the corner of the room became mountainous in the obviousness of his presence, holding them to their chairs three feet apart. Thus constrained, Kendall began to babble: "I'm just an idiot, Flora. I never deserved it. That you—really, it shouldn't have happened; you shouldn't have cared for me; I'm not worth it." For a minute he merely babbled while she sat smiling at him.

The officer, discreetly absorbed in his clerkly occupation, was aware of something unusual, and glanced over his shoulders to see two young people bending toward each other from two plain chairs—clearly the old story, but not against the rules.

Presently they stood up, leave taking; then the officer got a little shock, for the young woman stepped over to the young man and lifted her lips to be kissed; quite irregular, no doubt. He did not hear her whisper, "Remember, Phil, you're not to start wrong!"

When Kendall got out of doors he was, more or less, still babbling; but the twist was out of his brain and he presently perceived how irrational and foolhardy had been that scheme of perjury. For how could be account for the unusual caliber of this revolver being the same as that of the bullet which killed Othman, and one chamber having been recently discharged? They would have tripped him at it—a wild idea.

But what to do now? His hands were still empty, and if his motive to save Flora Marsden had been powerful before, it now had all the pull of the stars behind it. He must! And more clearly than before he felt a leading, an intuition, drawing him to Othman's house.

Up on the fifth floor of the house, at that hour, Jenks was packing a stout old trunk. The lid was thrown back, two trays lay on the bed. As he went about the packing, Jenks' lank and chalky face would have struck any casual observer as that of a man with a tranquil mind.

At half past four the trunk was packed. Jenks closed the lid without locking it. Then, with deliberation, he surveyed the plain, pleasant room which he had occupied ever since the house was built. He went downstairs, with a glance around Daphne's room as he passed through, his eyes lingering an instant on the great canvas which shed its undying beauty just as though Othman still sat in the chair by the little table to drink it in. Jenks grinned faintly at the nymph, and went on through the rich, empty house until he knelt at a front window in the second story. The shade was up a foot, so that he could see the opposite side of the street from the Fifth avenue corner half way to Madison. He was curious to know whether a certain blocky man was watching there. What he saw brought a subtle change like the stiffening of a dog's back. Kendall, the reporter, stood over the way.

Kendall, in fact, was hoping for a further sight of that blocky man with seamed face whom he had twice seen hereabouts. That odd advertisement in the Evening Forum had never dropped out of his mind. He associated the blocky man with it. But no blocky man was in sight this afternoon; and soon after Jenks knelt at the window the reporter started across the street. It naturally occurred to Jenks that the house was about to receive a visitor, and he slid back upstairs—even taking a tray out of the trunk as though his packing were not quite finished.

Kendall, being admitted by the fatherly policeman without question, did go up to the fifth story. At the open door to Jenks' bedroom he beheld the valet gravely replacing the top tray in his trunk. At the tap on the open door Jenks looked around, and replied to Kendall's greeting with a servantly "Good afternoon, sir."

"Packing up," Kendall observed.

"Yes, sir. They'll be wanting us out of the house. I'm looking for another place."

"What have you done with your story of the murder?"

"Nothing. I'm no hand at writing. Then I got to thinking that over—I'm short of money; a couple of hundred dollars would come in handy. At first I thought if I could get something from the newspapers it would be a good thing. But I have my living to make, sir. This is all the trade I know. I got to thinking that a gentleman wouldn't care for a man who'd been in the newspapers that way. It would make a bad impression; might keep me from getting another place." He regarded the reporter candidly, and asked, "Don't you think so, sir?"

"I've never had a man myself; I don't know how it would strike a gentleman who was hiring one," Kendall replied, and he was bound to admit the hit when Jenks soberly answered:

"No, sir. But I'm afraid it would make a bad impression; so I've given it up. Much obliged to you for your advice about having a reporter write it," he added cheerfully.

Kendall secretly admitted that in impudence he was not the man's match, and nothing was to be gained from bandying words with him in this fashion.

"The police will want you at the trial, you know."

"O, yes, sir. I've arranged about that. They'll know where to find me."

"You leave this evening?"

"Tomorrow. I've engaged a lodging. The police have the address."

Kendall was tempted to try a pointblank attack; but he felt it would be quite useless; no mere verbal duel would get anything out of the valet. And what he chiefly wished to know was whether Jenks was preparing to leave the house and when. Knowing that much, he turned away, descending to Othman's bedroom.

The imminence of the tragedy came to him again, as though it still suffused the air and by some special sort of exertion, some subtle sense, one could reach out and lay hold upon it. This bedroom, Daphne's room, and the small ante-room off it, formed the inner case in which Othman lived. The secret was here somewhere, impalpably attaching to these silken stuffs, this polished wood. Why couldn't

THE STORY THUS FAR.

FREDERICK OTHMAN, a man of some mystery, lives in New York in a house of forbidding aspect, surrounded by art treasures and other evidences of wealth. To him, one night, comes

NELSON BARLOW, a young society wastrel who has forged and embezzled under circumstances that put him in Othman's power. From Barlow Othman worms a story concerning

STAMFORD MARSDEN, a business man of reputed probity. The tale has to do with a girl, abandoned years before in a Maine village, and a child, supposedly Marsden's. Othman is in love with

FLORA MARSDEN, Stamford Marsden's daughter, and offers to help Barlow out of his difficulties if he will use his social position to bring about the match. There is a skillfully conducted courtship, in the course of which Othman extends much needed financial aid to Marsden. Meanwhile Othman has acquired control of a paper on which

PHILLIP KENDALL, a distant cousin of the Marsdens, is working as a reporter. Kendall, hopelessly in love with Flora, is not at all pleased when Othman directs him to investigate the story about her father's past. He finds Marsden's supposed child in Maine, however, and presently this girl, known as Marie Marsh, turns up in New York in the care of a certain Mrs. Smith, who seems to have inclinations toward blackmail. Kendall suspects that Othman is manipulating the threatened scandal to increase his influence over the Marsdens. He is sure of it when he recognizes

JENKS, Othman's valet, as a man he once saw leaving Mrs. Smith's apartment. He accuses Othman of perpetrating a fake, there is a fight, and Kendall is ejected from the house by Jenks, murderously flourishing a revolver. Flora has promised to marry Othman, but changes her mind when Kendall, in desperation, reveals to her certain things he has learned about the man. On the night when she goes to Othman's house to break her engagement Othman is found murdered in the room in which his greatest art treasure, Titian's "Daphne," is hung. Flora admts having quarreled and struggled with Othman, but tells CAPTAIN WELBASKY, of the police, that she left before anything more serious occurred. Jenks, the valet, offers an alibi, substantiated by witnesses, to the effect that he had been sent out on an errand. Barlow was in the house at the time of the shooting, and when the papers proving his forgery are found at Othman's, indicating a motive for murder, he is arrested. Then a revolver is picked up in the Othman driveway, a woman witness appears with a convincing story of having seen Flora Marsden stooping over at the spot where the weapon was found, and Flora is taken into custody. Thereupon Barlow, released after Flora's arrest, writes the police that he is the murderer and kills himself. His romantic sacrifice is futile, however; Welbasky does not believe his "confession" and insists that Flora's story has a flaw in it. Kendall is desperately trying to prove that there has been a jewel robbery and that Jenks and Mrs. Smith are involved in it. Hopeless over his failure to get any evidence of this, the reporter gets permission to have one last talk with Flora.

"The police will want you at the trial, you know."
"O, yes, sir. I've arranged about that. They'll know where to find me."

THE AFFAIR AT OTHMAN'S ..... By Will Payne

man get hold of it, when destruction hung over Flora Marsden's shining head like a falling sword?

He looked about the long, narrow, rich room; wandered down it and back. This was the way he had come that day when Jenks drove him at the point of a pistol. That day was only one week off, yet it seemed on the other side of the world! This was the way he had come, down the room, past the bed, into the bathroom. Same bathroom; not a thing different, so far as he could see and remember. There was the chair which he had put into the tub in order to reach the three high windows. Suddenly, with an odd vividness, he remembered looking out of those small windows. With an unaccountable nervous haste he put the chair in the tub, climbed up, raised the middle window. It looked across a small court to the blank brick wall of the next building, and downward as into a well. But here were these ventilator boxes of painted sheet iron, one at the bottom of each window.

The top of the box was a lid, fastened with a hook, for convenience in cleaning it out or repairs. He didn't remember having noticed that before, but it was plain now. He pushed the hook, lifted the lid, and looked into a V-shaped metal trough, as long as the width of the window sill, about five inches across the top and as deep, the outer, sloping side being formed of fine wire screen so as to admit air freely, while the solid top, or lid, would keep out rain or snow. This troughlike, V-shaped affair was quite empty, however. Why was he poking about up here, anyhow?

Nevertheless, he moved the chair, opened the window to the left, unhooked the lid, and looked into that trough, where something glittered. He lifted up a blazing stomacher, four richly jeweled bracelets, a pair of sparkling shoe buckles, a tiara with a big ruby in the center. There were several other shining things.

Here was a find; but what to do? To be valuable as evidence these things must be attached to Jenks. No doubt Jenks would put them in his trunk or bag; attempt, in some way, to carry them out of the house. If he could be caught in the attempt, that would be evidence. Kendall closed the lid, closed the window, put the chair back where he had found it, and started with all speed for Welbasky. It was already five o'clock; he must hurry.

AT four o'clock this Tuesday afternoon, as Kendall was leaving police headquarters, one Wedstrum, formerly business agent of a bricklayers' union, emerged from a shabby old brick building on Lipton street, where he had been conferring with three other men.

He had walked about a rod west from the street door of the building when a man of medium height, smooth shaven, and wearing a derby hat, stepped up behind him, and shot him through the back of the head. Fifty or more people, startled by the roar of the gun, saw the assassin running to a black closed car which stood at the curb ten feet away. He jumped into the car, which wheeled briskly round the next corner, and vanished.

The matter was of moment, as crimes go, because one of our cheerful, American, politico-labor vendettas had been in progress in that district for some time and Wedstrum was a figure of considerable importance in it. The police felt it incumbent upon them to do what they could, which probably wouldn't be much, to discourage a continuance of this fifteenth century blood feud in the streets of modern New York, so they were straining every nerve to catch the assassin promptly. Captain Welbasky had taken the case into his own hands, and when Kendall called he was listening to the first reports from his men. For him the Othman case was practically ended; mere files and history, from the police point of view. He was absorbed in the Wedstrum case and it was a nuisance to be interrupted irrelevantly. Nevertheless, out of a really kindly feeling and because he had promised an absolutely square deal, he did after a while admit the young man.

"You must make it snappy, Kendall; I'm up to my ears in new work," he said at once, with a busy man's brusqueness.

"I've found something," Kendall began, and described what it was and how he had found it. "Jenks put the jewels there. He'll attempt to take them out of the house. We can catch him at it by close watching, and that will tie him to it."

Undoubtedly this was a find, and quite likely Jenks had put the jewels in hiding. But Welbasky immediately formed a perfectly satisfactory explanation, to wit: the lank valet had nothing whatever to do with Othman's murder, but, finding that Othman had been murdered, he saw an opportunity of profiting by it, and so took the jewels out of the secret safe and hid them, meaning to get them out of the house at the first opportunity. In fine, Kendall was furnishing the police with a clew to a larceny, and the police had much bigger fish than that to fry just now. Welbasky had no time to argue with the obstinate young man, to whom, nevertheless, he proposed to be absolutely fair.

"I'm tied up now, Kendall," he grumbled, "up to my ears; every man on the jump; a new case. I'm watching every exit from New York in this new case. Jenks'll not get out of town tonight. I'll see he takes nothing out of the house. That's all I can do now. If I get a man loose later on, I'll let you have him. See here! Watch Jenks yourself for the present. You know how to do it. Keep in touch with me. I'll give you a man later if I can get one. But you watch him yourself. I'll promise he doesn't get out of town. Or get a private detective to watch him if you want to. He won't do anything tonight. It's the best I can do, Kendall. You'll have to excuse me now."

LEAVING the detectives' office, Kendall noted, with a pang, that it was ten minutes to six. If Jenks was to be watched, it was high time the watching began, for the valet might leave the house at any moment; might already have left. He must get a cab.

A young, red, moon face under a dilapidated cap set at a rakish angle was looking at him, leaning out of a taxi and regarding him with invitation as a possible fare. Sort of providential; just when he wanted a cab here was this taxi driver leaning out and looking at him, waiting for a passenger. Kendall accepted it in that spirit and laid his hand on the cab door, saying, "Corner of Madison avenue and Seventy-third street."

The young, red, moon face nodded, with an air of alacrity, and Kendall jumped into an especially shabby and hard used vehicle with broken springs under the seat. Through the window he observed the driver's round head, with the battered cap set rakishly askew on it, and his round, burly shoulders.

At Madison avenue and Seventy-third Kendall got out, not to pay the driver and dismiss him, but to explain; "I'm a reporter on the Forum." He exhibited his badge. "I'm watching a man."

He then directed the driver to go round nearly in front of Othman's house, pull up at the curb on the opposite side of the street, and stand there. The moon face was nodding, in token of understanding and interest. Driving a taxi, sometimes on two wheels, through the jammed streets of New York, with irritable traffic cops at all intersections, provided thrills of a sort; but they grew stale with much use. This affair smelled like a new adventure to the tattered driver, who put his heart into it.

And Kendall soon realized that stalking a man in a taxi had advantages over the foot method. Although it was below freezing and a biting wind blustered out of the northwest, in lulls and sudden little squalls, with promise of a blizzard in the evening newspapers and the sky, he could sit quite comfortable in his disreputable cab, with a steady eye on the house front nearly opposite and his legs at rest. He had chosen the south side of the street because he expected Jenks to go east, the direction in which the cab headed. If Jenks went west, he'd have to abandon the cab and follow on foot.

The watcher spent a painful hour. Then a cab on the other side of the street swung in to the curb just past the driveway to Othman's house. It had hardly come to a full stop before the lank figure for which Kendall had been watching came briskly out of the driveway and in a twinkling disappeared into the cab, which was once more in motion. Kendall's moon faced driver had long since killed his engine and was then engaged in rolling a cigaret.

Kendall simply hadn't thought of a cab, for the thrifty valet had always gone on foot. He opened the door, leaned out, gave excited instructions. The driver dropped tobacco pouch and cigaret papers, started his engine, threw his lever to turn in the street, and gave chase. But half a dozen cars and cabs came along in a string, preventing the turn. Already Jenks' vehicle had disappeared into Fifth avenue. It was a yellow cab like a million others. Blind pursuit would be the most harebrained of wild goose chases. Jenks had got away.

Here was a find; but what to do? To be valuable as evidence these things must be attached to Jenks.

Staring out of his dilapidated vehicle, Kendall saw Jenks' cab disappear into the traffic of Fifth avenue and realized that direct pursuit would be useless. But there was one chance and he took it, calling to the driver: "Too late! Never mind turning. Beat it down to Forty-fifth street. We may catch him there."

They were off, and Kendall dropped back on the broken-springed seat in despair, and a hope. Had he missed fire on a last chance, or was Jenks going to Mrs. Smith's? Unless they beat him there, how could they know where he had gone? From the rear seat the reporter watched the traffic ahead, his nerves winding up at every obstacle.

It wasn't the moon faced driver's fault; Kendall admitted that. The man did all man could do to make speed, twice shaving other vehicles by a hair, once bringing up with a jolt of tight set brakes, his cab's battered nose against the fender of the car ahead. But at Fifty-ninth street fate turned down her thumbs. They were just in time for a scatter brained driver ahead to slide by the signal and run into a street car, which wrecked his machine and tied everything on wheels into a hard knot for ten minutes. So, when they finally crossed Lexington avenue into Forty-fifth street, the block ahead wore the innocent air of never having seen a lank person named Jenks in a taxi.

If this had really been the valet's objective, no doubt he had already arrived and was comfortably disposed in Mrs. Smith's flat, his cab nowhere in sight. Kendall had considered that contingency on the way down. If Jenks was not here, he hadn't the least notion where to look for him. He proposed, therefore, to keep on looking where he had a notion the valet might be.

"Pull up yonder," he said to the driver, indicating a spot about four doors beyond Mrs. Smith's.

When the cab stopped there he got out and took a ten dollar bill from his pocket, explaining: "I think the man I'm after is in that building. I'm going to wait till he comes out. You go across to that delicatessen and get us some grub. Probably they'll give you coffee. If the man comes out while you're gone, I'll follow him. Take the rest of the money for fare and tip and don't bother about me."

The driver gravely regarded his unusual passenger for an instant, and cast a glance, not without a certain affection, at his battered cab; it wasn't much, but he'd rather not lose it. However, the sporting instinct was well developed in him, so he said: "All right, cap," and took the bill in a dirty hand, starting across the street. At the door of the delicatessen he glanced back, and once, while waiting for the grub to be put up, he came to the door and looked across the street; but his cab still stood at the curb. He returned, with paper bags and two pasteboard vessels containing hot coffee. He and Kendall divided the food, Kendall taking his share inside the cab, while the driver climbed to his seat. There was comfort in the sandwiches and hot coffee and a cigaret. By letting down a corner seat, Kendall could sit comfortably and still, through the back window of the cab, keep a steady eye on the oaken door that led to Mrs. Smith's flat. After giving the driver ten dollars, nearly ten dollars more was left in his pocket. He proposed to sit there all night if necessary.

The wind grew more boisterous, and it began to snow. That was bad, for it obscured the view and made it easier for a man or vehicle to escape, but there was no help for it. He had much time in which to take stock of his situation and to ask why he was sitting there. All along he had hung to a clew which practical Welbasky considered fantastical. But only three people were in a position to shoot Othman. Flora didn't, Barlow didn't, so it must have been Jenks. All the circumstantial evidence negatived that amateur conclusion, but he had to stick to it as a drowning man must stick to a straw if there is nothing else. If Jenks did do it, something would show; no matter how cunningly it was hid, an ear or tail of the deed would stick out somewhere; nothing to do but watch without winking and catch the tail when it did stick out. He proposed not to let Jenks out of sight, except when he was behind the walls of a house, as now. That was his whole theory—laughable, no doubt, to an experienced detective.

Cold, even in the cab. He beat his arms to keep warm. The moon faced driver, on the seat at his back, was crouched and huddled in his ragged coat, the jaunty cap pulled down over his ears. The street was nearly empty, not only because the hour was wearing late but because the blustering wind and snow in intermittent flurries sent people indoors.

A quarter to eleven. Holding his watch in numb fingers and bending over to get some light on the dial, Kendall could just make out the time. He put the watch back in his pocket and beat his hands together, and then thrilled. A coated figure was coming out of the oaken street door. It was a woman with a traveling bag in her hand. It was Mrs. Josephine Smith. Evidently she had not counted on this change in the weather, for she paused a moment in the open doorway, a faint light from within falling upon her, and ducked her head to the snow flurry, raising a hand to turn up the collar of her coat. Without doubt, Mrs. Josephine Smith, carrying a rather large traveling bag.

She looked up and down the street, saw the cab at the curb, and started for it. Kendall understood; she had meant to walk, at least had not called a cab, but when this forerunner of a blizzard struck her face she looked around for a conveyance. Where was Jenks?

With that question in mind Kendall slid out of the cab on the left hand side and poked the huddled, unhappy driver. "Woman coming," he said, as fast as his tongue would work. "Take her wherever she wants to go, but tell me where it is and go slow so I can follow you afoot. Understand? Take her, but tell me and go slow, engine trouble."

He ducked down behind the mud guard. The driver slid along the seat and looked out. Mrs. Smith was then almost at the cab door, and the driver climbed out to take her bag.

"Can you take me to the Grand Central station?" she asked.

"Yes, lady," said the driver. "Guy told me to wait here, but I guess he ain't comin'; deadbeat."

"Too bad," Mrs. Smith replied politely, and climbed in the cab.

When the driver was again behind the wheel he stooped a little and said to huddled Kendall, "Grand Central."

Kendall's voice came back, "Go slow, so I can follow on foot." He dropped on all fours, lest Mrs. Smith should happen to be glancing down, until the cab rolled past him; then stepped over to the sidewalk. The driver played his part well, moving swiftly away from Kendall's locality, wheeling and crossing the street; only when he was a block off did his engine begin to misbehave. Kendall was then footing at his best for the Grand Central station.

On seeing Mrs. Smith emerge with a traveling bag; his idea had been that she was going to join Jenks, who, apparently, had not come to the flat at all that evening. Following her would take him to the valet. But where was Marie Marsh? The threads ran into a tangle again. Maybe this departure of Mrs. Smith was only a ruse, and by following her he was letting Jenks escape. Was he blundering? All along, when it came down to details, poignant doubts on that score had beset him. Ought he to go back to the oaken door? But he had started on this trail now and would follow it through. So he hurried on, making for the big railroad terminal.

Looking out through the glass doors of the station into Forty-second street, he saw the battered cab draw up. Mrs. Smith alighted from it and paid the driver. A station porter already had her bag. To keep out of her sight, but not let her get out of his sight, he went on to the newsstand and turned his back, the collar of his overcoat up to his ears. When he looked around Mrs. Smith and her porter were six feet away, beyond him. He let them gain twice as many more feet and followed. In the huge concourse she spoke to the porter and turned to the right, along the bank of ticket windows. The porter dropped the bag and waited while she joined the line at a window.

That would be a New England train, Boston probably. But where was Jenks? Where was Marie Marsh? Apparently Mrs. Smith had decided upon this journey only within the last few hours; otherwise she would have bought her ticket earlier, for it was only by chance that one could get Pullman space on a night train at this hour. Kendall drifted on toward the information desks in the center of the huge room, where she would not be apt to see him when she turned from the ticket window, although he could easily keep her under his eye. This was puzzling. Perhaps Jenks and Marie Marsh already had tickets and would join her at the train. Or could she be going alone? Another wild goose chase—following her down here in this fashion?

She was up to the window now, talking to the clerk. There seemed to be some difficulty—no more berths, probably. But after a minute she was opening her handbag, taking out a purse, passing bills through the wicket. He saw her examining the ticket that had been handed out to her, putting it in her purse. He went round to the other side of the circle of desks, lest she come that way and see him. The porter picked up the bag. They marched again; not toward the train gates, however, but off to the left. Whatever that might mean, Kendall proposed to find out and took after them boldly. Then he saw the burly figure and broken nose of Sergeant Dick Ferguson at the edge of a crowd that waited in front of a train gate. He remembered that Welbasky was watching the railroad stations in that new murder case. At any rate, here was a friend at hand. But just now he must keep track of his game.

(To be concluded.)

Paris Makes A Trip to New York and Brings Us Back Her Latest Fashion Gifts

NEW YORK.—(Special Correspondence.)—Continue extracting the tube root of your costume, but see to it that the tube has more than root—that there be a flounce, a godet, or a drape to widen the hem line and diversify the silhouette.

Let every frock have its own special wrap.

Bob your skirt a trifle, but dissimulate your purpose by adding panel, cascade, or flounce.

Don't get out of step in the scarf dance. Scarves are still one of the leading motifs of the season.

Call it the period frock, the robe de style, or what you will, but don't call it off. The bouffante skirt and fitted bodice are thriving today as much—if not more—than ever before.

Come out in print all you like, but see to it that you are an edition de luxe and that plenty of margin relieves the figured fabric.

Try to be decorative in the evening. Don't let any rhinestones around your home go to waste. These brilliants switch on the moment that evening begins.

Yes, I have been at the French exposition in the Grand Central palace! I have seen some of the latest of Parisian garments worn by mannequins brought along with the gowns, and the sketches today represent a few items of fashion information carried away from the opening night. My style in presenting them thus seems rather roman candle in its effect. But, though I have thus shaken out these abrupt and luminous paragraphs, it must not be suspected that I have no more resources than the roman candle.

The fact of it is that the French exposition was not merely fireworks. It was a whole text book of Gallic industry, and from the fashions alone—those creations brought to New York by such poets of needle and fabric as Cheruit, Lanvin, Drecoll, Worth, Paquin, and Jeuny—one could write busily for some months to come. Here was fashion dignified to the most beautiful pageantry, and here was pageantry dictating the dress ritual of our everyday lives.

One cannot say that the costumes burst upon us without warning. The silhouette is the same as that defined by our regulation spring openings. Nearly all of the details have, too, been foreshadowed by these less spectacular collections. The value of this recent exposition of French modes lay, therefore, not in its novelty. That which made it so impressive in the eyes of the American student of the mode was the emphasis placed by these French creators upon vital elements of today's fashion. Here were not models picked by the American retailer from the hundreds of costumes shown by each famous dressmaker. Here were the things that Cheruit, Callot, and other members of the French group of artists had themselves picked as being most representative.

It is, of course, hard to choose a group of gowns from this brilliant collection, and although next week I shall follow this letter by illustrating some of the evening gowns, I feel apologetic toward the fashion exhibitors at the French exposition for attempting to compress their varied creations into the narrow scope of two letters. Nevertheless, since I am condemned to sketchiness, I shall approach now my present task of writing about a few of the daytime modes presented at this notable occasion.

As you will see by looking both at the back and front views given of these costumes, I have selected three admitting some combination of printed fabric. This constitutes no haphazard choice, for, although printed fabrics were not a dominating feature of afternoon creations, they were certainly an arresting one, and in scarcely any other single province did the individuality of the designer have such a favorable outlet.

Looking at some of these frocks and wraps which utilized the printed crepe, one wondered why in the world the costume of this character has contrived in the past to be so boring. Usually, I admit, I am prejudiced against these patterned things. My customary reaction on seeing one is to say pettishly, "O, pshaw, why aren't you on a wing chair or hanging up at the window where you belong." But when I saw a few of the French models, I no longer resented the interior decorator touch. Such charm, such chic, such whimsicality, such wealth of invention! As we watched one of those idiomatic French mannequins shooting across the stage of the Grand Central palace, a friend of mine remarked, "That's the only witty printed effect I ever saw."

The witty costume to which she referred happened to be the Callot model which we show at the right. Here it is—the loveliest of white crepe suits with a three-quarter length tunic of white crepe patterned in red. The same designed material functions on sleeves and collar. Save for the long narrow streamers of red depending from the white crepe blouse collar, that is all. Yet it is quite enough to express a great difference between the ordinary combination of plain and printed fabric and its own smart self.

Of course, a great deal of the variety of result in costumes of this character depends upon the association of wrap with frock. So much of this sort of thing has been going on for the past seasons that it does not sound in the least exciting, and it is a supreme tribute to the French designers that they manage to make it seem so. In this present example the trick is obvious. Callot has made the coat ever so much shorter than the tunic. Incidentally, one may remark that in doing so she is pursuing no solitary inspiration. Numerous other designers are also intent upon the publicity of the blouse. In fact, here is a note of fashion which may be expected to reverberate through midsummer modes.

A less accustomed prank is the alliance of printed jacket with plain fabric frock. At the French exposition were several Worth costumes reversing the familiar formula of plain wrap with printed frock. One bordered its coat of printed crepe with fur, and another—the one we illustrate at the left—depended entirely upon its own exertions. This wrap, shown only in the group of back views, is allied with the frock of black satin revealed in the larger drawing.

The frock itself is quite charming enough to need no press agent of a printed coat. Here is one of those black satin frocks which the Parisienne considers indispensable to her wellbeing. It is, in truth, the backbone of her wardrobe, and one can fancy her enduring separation from her lip stick as easily as from this uniform for restaurant lunch and tea.

The merit of this Worth gown lies chiefly in the deft draping of the skirt, for a full appreciation of which it is necessary to scrutinize both back and front views. It will cause no shock of surprise to learn that the underskirt revealed by such draping is of vivid red, and that the same color is repeated in the puffing which defines the waist line and in the diamond shaped appliques on the short sleeves. Certainly not, for all the enduring spring we have become accustomed to the touch of red on both black and white costumes. It is interesting to know, however, that this same mood is sustained by the latest creations from Paris.

The frock has, of course, pretty much given up playing solitaire. For a long time it has insisted upon a two hand game. But, although we are used to the ensemble costume, we could not fail to be impressed by the emphasis which this recent collection placed upon the accompanying coat. And, by the way, it was always in the case of daytime gowns a coat and not a cape. If one excepts the smart little shoulder cape attached to the gown, one must think nowadays of this wrap as being, like Cinderella, liberated only by the fall of night. Then, as the accompaniment to evening gown, it enjoys the privilege of fashion denied it during the daytime.

But, though Paris has declared itself unequivocally for accompanying wrap, do not imagine for a moment that said outer garment must be a matching one. Quite the reverse. Often the relationship between gown and coat may be traced only through the tiniest of clews. For instance, Lanvin places in the lining of a black crepe coat worn with a printed black and white crepe frock merely a large motif of the print. And frequently the alliance of wrap and gown is established by the same color combination worked out in different fabrics. Thus Beer completes a white crepe frock trimmed with black lace with a white velvet cape edged with black monkey fur.

For the accompanying coat of the daytime costume of crepe or satin, kasha received at the exposition the accent struck by previous collections. Nevertheless, by far the greatest number of such wraps were negotiated in black satin—satin of a wonderful high luster. These satin coats are often so long that they encourage a use unidentified with the frock which they accompany. It is to this category that one ascribes the Beer model second from the right. Here, worn over a crepe frock embroidered in blue and black, you find the noncommittal policy which makes such accompanying coats practical for general wear. Here, also in the simple play of horizontal and diagonal tucks, you locate the Parisian ideal of chic.

Speaking of coats in general, one may say that the straight line with snugly fitted hip prevailed throughout the exposition. However, there was often some widening at the hem to indicate the relationship of the present day coat with the present day dress. Not nearly so marked usually as in the frocks—one grants that at once. Yet seldom did a coat permit one to forget that the flare below the knee is the proper gesture with which to atone for that slim straightness above.

In the second model from the left we show you how Drecoll interprets the familiar knee flounce in a frock of black crepe combined with white and black printed crepe. Here the essential feature does not, as is usually the case, terminate the gown. Instead it halts above the hem in order to reveal a border of printed material beneath.

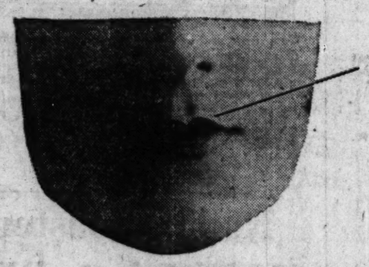
Judging By The Face

By Doris Blake.

Polygamic eye.

Conjugal eye.



Amative upper lip.

Applying the Principles of Character Analysis to Prospective Matrimonial Mates

IS THE human face an open book, by which men and women can intelligently choose partners in marriage?

By the fullness of a mouth, the shape of an eye, the turn of a lip corner, a cleft in the chin may you know the propensity to love, the ability to inspire faith and confidence, the capacity for domestic life?

In other words, may you apply the principles of character analysis to matrimonial applicants?

M. O. Stanton, in his face and form reading, which is a complete summary of character analysis, believes in the practical application of the laws of scientific physiognomy to pre-marital judgment. He believes character analysis the only method that can make possible race improvement by intelligent design.

If one would determine the capacity of an individual for love itself, for love of home, for love of children, fecundity, habits of economy, cheerfulness, hospitality, loyalty, benevolence, and the other traits contributory to married happiness, look for the signs in indenture, fullness, curves, color, or shape of the various parts of the physiognomy.

What the Lips Tell.

Let us take love, or amativeness, the trait which binds hearts and homes together and serves to make the foundation of marriage secure. In its definition Stanton includes with love of the opposite sex, procreative energy, passion, conjugality, manliness and womanliness, energetic individuality, base of mentality, and he advises that its presence is determined in a fullness, moisture, and freshness and redness of the center of the upper lip.

The fullness well exhibited, our authority says, coupled with a moral balance, makes the man very much of a man and the woman very much of a woman, and such persons will be more influential in their community than those deficient in this faculty.

The full lip, by its size and color and moisture, indicates vigor and development of the reproductive system, and is a primary sign.

An upper lip thin, white, and dry shows an almost utter lack of amativeness, and consequent deficiency in conjugal and parental sentiments. Such persons should never marry, Stanton advises, for they would make unsatisfactory companions unless mated with one similar in character. This would be injudicious, for the offspring resulting from such union would probably show still greater deficiency in this direction and would really constitute a morbid variety of the human species which would not be worth perpetuating.

The character of the thin, white lipped is narrow, unsociable, and unlovable, with no power to attract the opposite sex. Often it exhibits a morbid, shrewish, suspicious manner and angularity of body. Creative force is lacking.

Study Muscular Formations.

Stanton presents bodily signs as well as facial to determine the amativeness of an individual. In addition to the full center of the upper lip, you must look for large convex eyes, rounding, muscular body, round limbs, and muscular hands and fingers.

By muscular is not meant the size of the muscle, but the quality. Many large persons are weaker than those inferior in size.

Muscular races, the author cites, and muscular persons are more prolific than those who are bony or angular, and exhibit a more demonstrative, sentimental and affectionate disposition.

"We must always look for signs of love in muscular and glandular formation," says the author, "for the most muscular are the most amative and the most prolific. It is the same in the animal kingdom. The most bony races, both men and animals, are the most amative and prolific."

A face which exhibits a small, narrow mouth with thin lips and narrowness between the eyes is indicative of narrowness of the pelvis with weakness of the uterine glands, and this body formation is unsuited to successful parturition, according to our authority.

The eyes by their size disclose the degree of the sentiment of love of the opposite sex, while their shape and position show the kind of love present.

Small or depressed eyes with sunken orbits denote less muscular power than large full eyes, and the pale colored eye indicates less vigor than well colored ones. A comparison of the eyes of all muscular animals is offered in proof. The eyes of the deer tribes, the gazelle, springbok, hare, rabbit, elk, goat, all indicate by their size and conformation that the muscular is their predominating system. The bull and the bull dog are examples of great muscular power, and both have great convex eyes.

By its shape you can tell whether it is a conjugal eye or a promiscuous eye. The conjugal or monogamic eye is interpreted as love for one only. It is disclosed in the round eye, shaped like that of a dove, which is noted for strong conjugal attachment. The wanton eye or the polygamous eye is indicated by an almond shaped opening between the eyelids. The round eye indicates a strong desire for a permanent attachment. If this is dissolved by death or otherwise great sorrow, its faithfulness often leads to a celibate life thereafter.

Observed in Mongolian Races.

The polygamous eye indicates the presence of love for promiscuous attachments in some; while in others, where the inherited quality is fine, amativeness will exhibit itself by one faithful attachment for the time. If death or other causes of separation ensue the individual will be quite able to console himself with another marital companion.

The almond form of eye is almost universally observed in the Mongolian races, who exhibit a low inherited quality, promiscuity in their attachments, and polygamy in their marriage.

The Turks, Arabs, and other Oriental races present the peculiar almond form of eye. The several races of animals which exhibit these different formations of the eye are also characterized by the same peculiarities of amativeness. Most of the bird tribes have round eye openings. They are monogamic, and the mating principle is dominant. The deer tribes and the lion, who live in monogamic relation with their mates, possess similar, shaped eyes. The eye opening that is greater in width than it is vertical is more promiscuous.

Look for These Signs.

To find out how home loving the individual, look for a fullness at the sides of the under lip. If there is a deficiency, the attachment for home is not deep grained.

The facial sign for love of children is shown by the drooping of each side of the upper lip on either side of amativeness, of which it is the natural and necessary companion. It forms a little scallop shape. In some subjects the outer sides of the lip project downward, almost overlapping the lower lip, just as is seen in dogs and cows, and other animals whose love of offspring is intense.

A love sign is found in the chin, when the muscles there have created a cleft or dimple. This indicates an appreciation of the beautiful in the opposite sex. It means that the individual will by faith and encouragement inspire the best in one of the opposite sex. It reveals a benevolent, generous nature.

ANSWERS TO LOVE PROBLEMS

Have you a perplexing love affair on which you need the counsel of a friend? Write to Doris Blake, care The Tribune, Chicago. If you wish a personal reply please send a stamped, addressed envelope.

Pretty Big Task.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am a young woman 23 years of age keeping company with a man ten years my senior. He is a widower with three children. He is modern and youthful in his ways. We love each other dearly and things look bright for us all, but should I marry him my parents and friends will heartlessly disown me and that would grieve me terribly. Also there is another man in my life. He is two years my senior and deeply in love with me. I do not love him, but just treat him as a good pal. Now, tell me what to do. HEARTBROKEN."

Honestly, dear, I think 23 too young for you to assume the responsibility of mothering three children not your own. It is a pretty big task to assume, you know. Stepchildren are harder to rule and manage than one's own. I think if I were you I would give myself another year before making the final decision. In the meantime, the younger man may be able to persuade you he is the one for you. If the widower finally wins out, at least you will not have walked into the responsibilities of his home without serious thought of the duties involved.

We'd Like to Know.

"Dear Miss Blake: I go with a fellow two years my senior whom I love very much. We had a quarrel and I am afraid that I will not see him again. The reason why I had a quarrel with him was because when he comes up to the house and there is any one there he does not even notice me, but when we are alone he acts altogether different. He thinks that I do not love him, but I do. I would like to know whether to keep on going with him or not. BLUE EYES."

Some day I should like some unprejudiced young man to tell me if there is anything to this continually refuted charge which reaches me of the male suitor's being the soul of absorption in the fair one when none is around to hear his declarations, and then in an audience of more than himself and the girl, he ignores her entirely, or is rude to her. So many times I hear this tale that I am at sea to understand the reason for it. Will some young man please enlighten me? Is the man jealous of his secret and doesn't want the world to know it? Or, what?

Useless to Try.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am in love with a fellow who does not seem to care for me. He has told me he loves me, but I can hardly believe it because when he has me along he acts nice, but when we are with other fellows and girls he is rude to me. We quarreled one night and since then he goes with another girl whom he seems to care a lot for. Please tell me how to regain his love, as I love him dearly. "W. M."

What would be the use of trying to regain the young man's love! Worried. You realize he doesn't care for you. So why pile up more unhappiness for yourself in the future? I wouldn't do it, dear, as it is a futile task at best.

A Remarkable Testimonial

Austin Hospital Association
INCORPORATED

Haskelite Mfg. Corp.,
133 W. Washington St.,
Chicago, Illinois.

May 7, 1924.

My dear Mr. Meyercord:

I wish to express to you my thorough approval of your PLYMETL AIR-TITE CLOTHES VAULT.

I feel it is a great accomplishment from the practical as well as the scientific viewpoint. The fact that the carbon disulphid gas used is a complete disinfectant to all germ life and is absolutely safe, is of great value to the medical world.

Every family should possess one as a preventative against sickness and the spread of disease. In cases of scarlet fever, diphtheria, measles, pneumonia, tuberculosis and such diseases as are frequent in the family life, the use of the vault to fumigate bedding, clothing, etc., is invaluable.

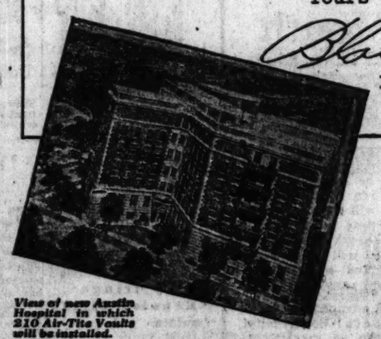
From an institutional standpoint, such as hospitals and sanitariums, there is no limit to its usefulness. The AUSTIN HOSPITAL in installing this vault in each room feels that the patients' health is being protected to the fullest extent.

The entire staff of the hospital and myself, unanimously and heartily endorse the vault.

Yours very truly,

Blaine L. Ramsay

B. L. Ramsay: Chief-Surgeon
AUSTIN HOSPITAL



View of new Austin Hospital in which 210 Air-Tite Vaults will be installed.

This remarkable testimonial by a prominent Chicago Surgeon clearly shows how valuable the PLYMETL Air-Tite Clothes Vault would be in your home. When Dr. Ramsay and the Governing Board of the Austin Hospital, now under construction at Columbus Park, Central Avenue and Flournoy Street, were shown in detail how we were able to produce an Air-Tite Cabinet, they immediately realized that we had a remarkable new improvement in hospital equipment. They contracted for 210 PLYMETL Air-Tite Vaults—one to be allotted to each bed. They also contracted for three large special vaults for fumigating all bedding, linen and mattresses, ridding same of all disease germs.

Something Never Possible Heretofore:

It is their intention to fumigate the clothing of each patient upon arrival and departure. After departure, all bedding and linen will be fumigated.

Can't you imagine the satisfaction of the patient who knows that all germ life is removed?

Large numbers of Chicago's leading citizens have already purchased one or more PLYMETL Air-Tite Clothes Vaults, installing them in their closets, garrets and sewing rooms. These folks are absolutely certain to be freed from the moth evil. We have formal written approval of the United States government as to the certain success of our fumigant in an Air-Tite Cabinet.

Why waste money on fur storage when the only protection you receive is that the moth hibernates? You do not get protection in the form of the destruction of the larvae or eggs. You can have it by buying a PLYMETL Air-Tite Clothes Vault and secure a ready means of protecting the family from disease germs. Write us for information on the Vault and call at our downtown sales room.

A Straight Back for the Straight Silhouette says Antoinette Donnelly

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—We read in the fashion notes: The silhouette is straight at Worth's. Doeuillet uses many fabrics, but the lines are straight. Renée may let the neck be rounded, but the silhouette not. Patou follows the two parallel lines. Premet, Charlotte, every last one of them designs for the feminine figure with the straight front and straight back.

The waist hews to no line, just falls where it may, sometimes completely out of sight; but the figure must hew to the straight and narrow back and front.

We are not going to be concerned today with the deviations from the straight path due to flesh preponderance, except in so far as it may be hidden away by holding the figure upright.

A thin girl may quite as easily ruin the popular silhouette by a hollow or sway back, by rounded shoulders and slumpy spine. Her shoulders will project one way and her abdomen another, and the dress will look like nothing Patou had in mind.

Helps Physical Ills.

Incidentally, while one is molding her form to meet the dress requirements she is going to do much to help out on physical ills which she probably never dreamed of as the result of an incorrect posture. Many more internal than external complications arise from the sagging back. And the latter are considerable, as you discover if you try to adjust a straight frock over a figure of many curvatures.

Following the dictates of fashion has been blamed for a number of ills of womankind. But there is no excuse now on that score. The straight dress silhouette is a health blessing in lovely, youthful disguise. And we are for it. It has contributed to the longevity of countless thousands of women, who, to meet its requirements, had to whittle down to normal weight. Now, if it will make women stand erect so much more to its credit.

You can appeal to women on a health plea and get only a half hearted response, compared to her willingness to improve for the sake of youth and beauty. So we won't discuss the health end of a straight spinal column when the fashion note of the moment carries the more forceful appeal making women look younger and slenderer.

If You Would Be Young.

Tell a woman, even one as supposedly well informed on health values as myself, that the way she sits and stands interferes with the passage of material through the intestines, with her breathing apparatus, with her whole digestive works, and she agrees, perhaps admits, that is why she is nervous, fatigued, and headachey. But she keeps on in the same old posture. Tell her her stooping shoulders and curved neck, projected abdomen and the hollow at the base of the spine makes her look older and she straightens up at once.

That is just what the faulty posture does, too. Youth is alert, erect, lithe, and live. So, if you would be young enough to grace the season's dress silhoutte becomingly, make the muscles of the spine and neck get to work on their business of holding you properly.

A youthful appearance can be preserved longer by holding a good posture than by using cosmetics. But you know that, of course, from seeing a stage impersonation, one minute that of a young person and the next, by the simple process of letting the erector muscles slump, portray an aged one.

Secret of Youthful Posture.

When reminded to stand straight the average person will put the brunt of the duty on the shoulders. She will thrust the shoulders back with a vigorous movement and extend the chest ridiculously. The chin will be drawn in in an unnatural position and one that precipitates a double chin effect.

The trick of a youthful posture is not in the shoulders, but in bringing the neck back in line with the spine and pushing up with the head, thus pulling upon the muscles between the back of the ears and the breastbone. This will bring up the chest without the backward swaying of the trunk or the shoving back of the shoulders. It is not necessary to stiffen the knees, either, as is supposed. In correct position the knees are not bent, but held in an easy position. The body is held as tall as possible without strain. There should not be any hollowing in the back. The abdomen naturally flattens when the back and neck are held straight. The chin should be held so that when you stand before the mirror you look squarely into your eyes.

Don't Slump.

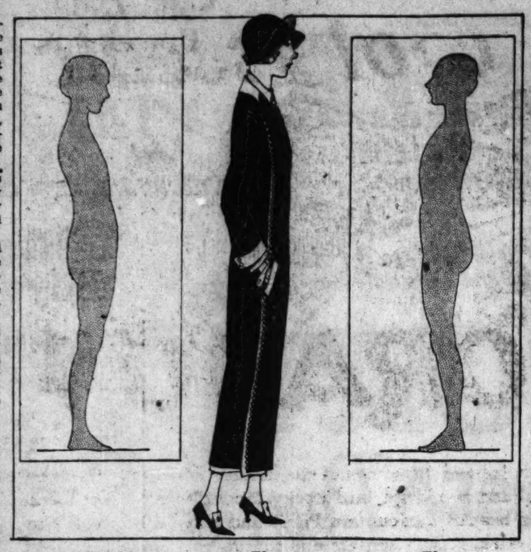
Another argument for youth in the straight spine is that when you refuse to hold it straight the weight of the body rests on the heels and gives a note of heaviness, whereas you are conscious of a spring in the walk of young persons. When they stand you are conscious that the weight is being divided between heel and ball of the foot, alert to the impetus to move.

Now, when you are trying to correct your posture, forget about your shoulders. Think of your neck and spinal cord in one straight line. Instead of letting the weight fall on your heels, let the body sway slightly forward from the heels up, stretching the spine and pulling the abdomen in. This will almost surely correct the hollow back. When you sit, don't slump. Let the spine and neck muscles work the same as when standing or walking.

We Recommend These.

To strengthen the muscles of the neck and back and correct rounded shoulders and protruding abdomen practice the following exercises:

1. Lie flat on the floor, face down, hands at sides; keep feet on floor and try to raise from the waist without assistance of hands. Do this gradually and slowly, as it is a bit strenuous at first.
2. Turn over and raise from the waist to sitting position.
3. Lie flat on the floor, hands at sides. Draw knees up to the chest. Extend knees, swinging legs over head and raising the pelvis from the floor. Return to position. Go easy on this one at first. It is hard.
4. Walk around the room with a weight on your head, swinging legs from the hips. Keep hands at sides.



Incorrect position: Round shoulders, hollow back. The smart silhouette. The correct posture.

Lines for Her Who Would Mold Her Form to Meet Dress Requirements

BEAUTY ANSWERS by Antoinette Donnelly

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Sho on hair? Oily hair, oily skin, freckles, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Write to me, have a tonic, a diet, or a set of exercises for what ails you. And you're welcome to them, and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply send a stamped, addressed envelope. Address Antoinette Donnelly, The Tribune, Chicago.

This department appears every day in the Daily Tribune.

ANXIOUS MOTHER: EXERCISES for flat foot: Rising and falling on tiptoe is one. You may repeat that fifteen or twenty times. Stand and try to clutch the carpet with the toes by turning toes under as far as posible. In sitting position, rest the feet easily on the floor in front, and turn the toes under as far as possible. Then relax. Here are three to start on. If you want a few more, send a stamped addressed envelope, please. But if you have an exaggerated case of broken arch and suffer much pain, I should advise your seeing an orthopedic specialist and accepting his advice about corrective work. He will undoubtedly advise a different kind of shoe and that is most important in remedying the pains from weakened arches.

M. E.: BOBBED HAIR HAS passed from its experimental and faddish stage and become an accepted and powerful factor in feminine fashions. It is a test of facial feature, there is no doubt of that. But I think the revival of the Cherry sisters much more imminent than the Seven Sutherland marvels. If the locks are not scissored, they must be dressed close to the head to look it. I have a theory that a slender neck is the proper pedestal upon which to mount the bob. If you have that, you cannot do yourself a great wrong, and you may do yourself "harnsum." I'd rather assume the responsibility of telling you to get married than to tell you to bob your hair, without seeing you.

MISS EMMA: ROUND SHOULDERS are practically unknown among people whose work requires an erect carriage of the body—those who carry things upon the head. With most of us, the occupations of daily life lead to bending forward over work—writing, drawing, sewing, lifting, and so on. The trunk is held in such a position that the shoulders tend to fall forward of their own weight. The best way to offset the damage of the rounded shoulders and sunken chest is to bring yourself to with a jerk every now and then, remembering to hold your back and neck straight. If you remind yourself often and forcibly enough, after awhile you will assume the upright attitude without any effort. A straight back does make you younger, you know.

MARION: I THINK YOUR SKIN needs greasing. If I were you I would cleanse the face at night with a good cream. Then give it a slight massage, using the same cream or a skin food. Use no water for awhile at night. In the morning splash cold water on the face generously. Try this for a month and let me know if it is not just what your dry skin needed.

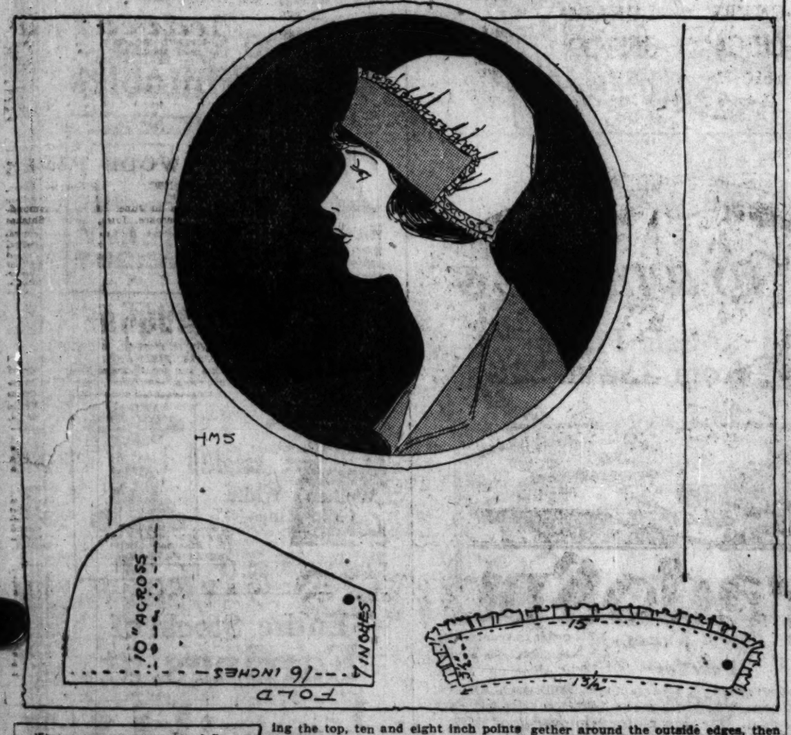
M. M. P.: I AM SORRY TO DISappoint you, but it is against the rules of this department to recommend or name any proprietary article on the market. Sending a stamped, addressed envelope would not help either, as the rule holds as firmly in personal mail as in answers appearing in this column of the newspaper.

JENNE: NO, CHILD, WITCH HAzel will not take out the blackheads. It is used as an astringent, which, as you know, means a pore closer. Try this way of removing the blackheads: First clean your face with a good cream. Then take a face brush, a good soap, and warm water and scrub. Rinse in warm water. Take a bit of clean linen between the finger tips and press out a few of the offenders at a time. Then wipe off with witch hazel and massage over the irritated part just a minute with a little more of the cream. Don't be impatient about trying to remove too many at once. Every night repeat the cleaning and removing a few more.

MARIE H.: BAD BREATH MAY be due to diseased tonsils, decaying teeth, constipation, or some chronic disorder of digestion. There is not much one can do for it unless the cause is discovered and removed. However, the relief you would experience would be well worth the money spent in finding out the trouble.

Practical and Fancy Needle Work

By Clotilde



What is your sewing problem? Do you have trouble in following a pattern? Do you find difficulty in making a skirt hang evenly or making a sleeve that doesn't twist? If there is anything you would like to know about these or other problems of needlework write to Clotilde, Chicago Tribune.

ORGANDY BOUDOIR CAP.

THIS attractive and becoming boudoir cap might be made to wear with the bed jacket that was shown last week. It is made of sheer white dotted organdy, and the upstanding piece across the front is of blue organdy, matching in shade the flannel of the bed jacket.

To make the pattern draw a straight line sixteen inches long on a piece of paper. This line represents the length of the cap down the middle. Six and one-half inches down from the top on this line make a dot, and measure straight across from this ten inches. The diagram will show just what is intended. The measurement across the bottom is seven inches on the fold, and starting at the top of the sixteen inch line draw the outer cap edge, connecting the top, ten and eight inch points as shown in the diagram.

The piece into which the cap is gathered is 15 inches across the top, 13½ across the bottom, and 3¼ wide. The lower edge curves up toward the center about one-half inch and, as can be seen, the upper edges round a little.

The head size is about twenty-eight inches. If this is not right, it can be changed by adding a little or taking off. It is made large so it will not bind and can be brought well down on the forehead.

Make a hem one-quarter inch wide across the bottom, and whip to the edge a narrow Valenciennes edging; then run a gathering thread around the cap edges. The upstanding band across the front is made of two thicknesses of the organdy, stitched together around the outside edges, then turned right side out. The gathered cap edge is basted and stitched to the bottom edge of this piece, and then the outer seam edge of the piece is turned in and stitched in place. A lace edging, matching the one across the bottom, is whipped to the edge of the blue.

The gathered edge of the cap is set evenly on to the band—pinning the middle of the cap and band together and trying to distribute the gathers as evenly as possible.

Taffeta and lace can be worked together beautifully for one of these caps, making the band of strips of taffeta and lace insertion and making the cap part of taffeta or organdy. Wash satin would also be good.

Cosmetics will not make up for the loss of your "beauty sleep"

Every woman knows there is no substitute for natural color.

Even with complexions easy to put on and readily accepted by the passing throng, no rouge is ever mistaken for the deeper tints that charm in maid or matron.

Such color means health. And health and youth endure only when each day's drafts on your energy and vitality are repaid that night by eight hours or more of deep, unbroken, refreshing sleep.

Fatigue poisons dull the warmth and glow of eyes, lips and hair as well as skin. In fact your whole body suffers. And doctors can't help you unless you are able to secure sound and regular sleep.

Every hour of sleep is "beauty sleep." Make the most of it.

Ask your dealer to show you his Simmons springs and mattresses. He offers many types and styles, each at the lowest price it can be built of safe, new, clean materials.

Study them. Compare them with your own bedding. Youth, energy and charm are worth more to you than his very best will cost you.

Women's and misses' summer frocks

Copies and adaptations of new imports

Just released and shown for the first time.
Supremely smart—the ultimate in style.

$45 $55 $65

A diversified collection of charming frocks that have captured and retained the air of the original Parisian models.

Fashioned of flowered silk chiffon, crepe de chine, georgette, Elizabeth or roma crepe in flower-like colors, navy and black.

There are dainty dance frocks that one will be proud to wear at the smartest country club parties this summer, frocks of deliberate simplicity for court, course or gallery, and dresses for every daytime occasion.

In this fascinating collection of vogue-assured frocks, are refreshing variations of the slender silhouette produced by the clever use of side drapes, plaited panels, cascading ruffles, myriads of tiny buttons and tinted laces.

Considering the unusualness of the values, the smartness of the styles, and the timeliness of the presentation, this is our most exceptional dress offering of the season. Fourth floor.

THE ADVENTURES OF FUZZY WUZZY

FUZZY WUZZY AND THE FLOATING FLOWER.

By Raymond Kelly.

WET sand is better to play in than dry sand is because when you make a little house or a play mountain out of wet sand it stays made but a dry sand one goes all to pieces right away. So for that reason Fuzzy Wuzzy was a happy little bear as he played in his sand pile that was still wet from the rain of the night before.

The rain had helped other things beside the sand, for the leaves were greener and all the flowers were washed clean of dust. Everything was so beautiful that Fuzzy Wuzzy kept looking about him, and that's how he happened to notice the prettiest flower he had ever seen. It was right at the top of the fofumble bush that hung over the sand pile, and Fuzzy wanted it as soon as he saw it.

"I'm going to pick that flower," said he, dropping his little shovel and scrambling to his feet. He stood as tall as he could but he could not quite reach the flower. So he jumped as high as he could and struck at it with his paw but he missed it, and the flower floated away and perched on the next bush.

"Why, it's a floating flower," said Fuzzy Wuzzy, who had never even heard of butterflies. I can catch it, but I'll have to think first." So he sat down and thought, scratching his head to make it think faster.

"I know what I'll do," he said. "I'll pretend that thing is a fish and catch it with daddy's dip net."

So he went into the den and got the net. But when he went to put it over the butterfly the net hit a low hanging branch of the wild crabapple tree. It bounced off the branch and hit Fuzzy Wuzzy on the head so hard that he bit his tongue right in the middle of a word.

This time the butterfly flew away out on to the tip of a branch of the old pine tree that hung over the wide place in the creek where the trout live. So Fuzzy Wuzzy sat down and thought some more.

"I know what I'll do," he said. "I'll pretend I'm asleep, and then that fellow will really go to sleep. Then I'll climb the tree and catch him." So he laid down and pretended he was asleep.

As soon as the butterfly saw that Fuzzy Wuzzy seemed to be asleep it decided to take a nap too. Then Fuzzy Wuzzy took the handle of the net in his teeth and climbed the pine tree. He stood up on the branch and walked slowly out towards its end where the butterfly sat in the sun.

Pretty soon Fuzzy Wuzzy decided he was close enough to make another scoop with his net. So he stood on one foot and held the other out in the air to balance him while he handled the net. He'd have got that butterfly too if it hadn't waked too soon. But it's a good thing that he didn't because butterflies do not like to get wet and this one would have done so if he had been in that net. You see Fuzzy Wuzzy scooped so hard with that net that he scooped himself right off that branch and fell into the creek.

My! How that little bear did bawl! He yelled so loudly that old Mother Bear dropped her dustpan without stopping to empty it and ran as fast as she could run. She grabbed Fuzzy Wuzzy out of the water and shook him a bit for scaring her so. Then she rubbed him down with a rough towel and stood him in front of the fireplace to dry while she said to him:

The little birds and butterflies
That float on high 'neath summer skies,
And pollywogs and puppy dogs.
As well as bears and boys,
Enjoy a life that's free from strife,
And filled with simple joys.

Glenn forgot to say "please." Father, thinking to drill the child on his manners, asked him what he should say.

"Please," answered Glenn.

Father gave him what he wanted and then said, "Now what do you say?"

"Thank you," said Glenn.

"You mustn't forget those little things," cautioned father, and then went on with his work.

Glenn waited a minute and then said, "You should say 'welcome,' daddy." M. K.

Mother was busy and Elinor was playing with the baby, but she wouldn't give him the blocks that he wanted.

"Let him have them—that's a good girl," mother said. A few minutes later, when he cried for something else, Elinor was again requested to give up her plaything to keep brother quiet until mother could finish her work and care for him.

But Elinor was growing tired of this program and she blurted out, "Why are babies havers and sisters givers?" A. R.

We are living in a movie colony. A neighbor gave my son Tommy an old hen. We promptly put her to work over a setting of eggs.

A few days passed. The neighbor called, and not seeing the hen, asked Tommy what he had done with it.

"O," said Tommy brightly, "she's off on location." G. T.

Max was seated between his parents at a public entertainment, but he wiggled around so much that they became annoyed.

His father said, "What's the matter?" rather impatiently, failing to notice that the stage was out of view of his son.

"Well, gee," pouted Max, "I'm getting tired looking without seeing." E. L. R.

A FRIEND IN NEED

I want to be the medium through which the friend in need and the friend in deed may be brought together. THOSE LESS FORTUNATE.

DON'T all of us like to feel that the supreme moment of happiness comes when a new life appears in the world—when that dimpled, rosy bit of humanity appears in its mother's arms? And don't we feel the best is none too good for the newcomer—and aren't we eager to see it has every advantage, every comfort?

Our files are filled right now with cases where the expected arrival of a baby is falling with crushing force upon families whose savings have been depleted by illness, upon widows and abandoned mothers who are just beginning to get a footing in the world. They feel as we do—that their precious little burdens should have every advantage—but they simply cannot provide!

And on the other hand, here are some of us, with everything conceivable for a baby's welfare—useless to us at the moment, and kept simply for the sake of sentiment! Baby clothes, cribs, bassinets, high chairs for the ones who have grown a bit—every family with growing children has one or more of these about. At present these articles only take up room, and all too often are thrown out and lost to every one at the next house cleaning or when moving. Wouldn't it be ever so much better, now that these articles have served their purpose in our families, to give them to some poor mother, to whom they would be a God-send?

Let me know, then, that you will help with every one of these articles which you have at hand! Let's make this a Clean-up week on articles of this sort, so that the advent of the babies will be an occasion of unalloyed joy in all the anxious homes which need our help!

WRITES FOR PUPILS.

"I am music supervisor in the Indian school here and have two talented pupils who have learned to play the saxophone and cornet and who are too poor to buy instruments. If any one has an old one and will send it C. O. D. to me, I will pay charges. These boys are deserving and have no one to help them. MRS. L. S."

There is not likely to be numerous discarded instruments of the kind requested, but we hope your plea falls into the hands of some one who will be able to meet the desires of these deserving Indian boys.

Wanted for Years.

"Incapacitated for the sustained physical and nervous efforts demanded by the usual workday of the manual laborer in the shops, I desire to fit myself for a position as interpreter. The expense of personal instructions is out of the question and the acquisition of a correct accent by the study of textbooks alone impossible.

"The other other solution would be in some of the sets of phonograph records for instruction in Spanish, German, French, and Italian. If some one has such a set that has outlived its usefulness, it would be of great benefit to me, and I would appreciate it greatly. Or a small, portable type phonograph that is not beyond repair would help.

"I hope you will not think my request is too great, for this is something I have wanted for years. "W. C."

If any one has the desired articles for this patient, there is no one to whom they would be of more usefulness.

Radio Fans Can Help.

"I board and room here in the city and my wife and baby live in the country. I see them only one day out of seven. My wages are not sufficient to meet all my needs.

"I wonder if some reader has a radio set not in use to enable my wife and baby to enjoy the evenings and day. "R. A. K."

We'll ask and see, R. A. K.

Alone All Day.

"Would some one having a phonograph not in use like to make a poor, sick, blind man happy by giving it to him? His wife works all day and he is alone. S."

I hope the request will meet with the response it deserves.

He Collects Stamps.

"I have never had the best of health and strength, and am attending an academey in the hope of bettering both. My favorite occupation is collecting foreign and United States stamps. I wonder if any one has any old or discarded collection or an old stamp album to give to me? I now keep my collection in a notebook, but it would be so much nicer in a regular album. R. R."

Here's a chance for some one to donate to an appreciative fan the collection he no longer cherishes.

This Is Pathetic.

"I write on behalf of a woman who has just moved into a clean flat from a neighborhood which had caused her own illness and that of her four small children. Her bed was so old that in moving it fell to pieces. Can any one furnish her a double bed? She also should have two or three small rugs, some window curtains, and living room chairs, since the ones she has are badly broken. She will soon be working again, but her earnings are not sufficient to cover more than the current expenses of rent and food. "C. P."

This is a pathetic case—do help if you can.

Confined in Sanitarium.

"I am at the tuberculosis sanitarium; have been for a year, and expect to have to stay for quite a while yet. I have a wife and five children. This, of course, is a great burden to my wife, so I wish you would ask some of your kind readers if they have anything in cast off clothing, such as a bathrobe, shirts, size 16, and a suit, size 42, or trousers, size 38. J. C."

The needed clothing will probably lighten J. C.'s load appreciably.

Widow in Straits.

"I wonder if among your many readers there is one who has a one piece dress I could wear to work. I am a widow with a child to support, and I cannot afford one as I work only three days a week. My dress is so torn and mended I cannot wear it much longer. MRS. R. C."

I hope some reader can find a dress to help this mother to appear at her work.

That Was Different.

Teacher asked who wanted a copy of "O," our monthly magazine, as she had a few numbers left. I immediately said that I would.

She said, "They are twenty cents, but I will give it to you for fifteen."

"O," I said, and left the room. I thought they were free. E. K.

Done on Purpose.

It was in my high school days when horses were more common than automobiles. One of my chums pointed to a buggy at the end of the block and told me to bring it around the block to the next corner, while he went into school to get something. I went over, got in and started the horse.

But I had not gone ten yards before I heard a yell: "Where are you going with my horse?"

I turned, down the center of the street, with a small boy at her heels, came an irate woman. By this time quite an audience had assembled.

I managed to stammer out, "Your boy told me to drive around the corner and meet him." Then, with two red ears, I took to my heels. Afterwards I found that my chum had done it on purpose, and that through the whole performance, he had been watching with two companions. W. S.

Polite but Frosty.

Several years ago, when muffs were in vogue, I attended a glove sale in a large store.

In order to have both hands free to examine the gloves on display, and to avoid any chance of losing my seal muff, I slipped it up on my arm, cuff fashion.

I was busily engaged in examining gloves when some one at my elbow said in a polite but frosty tone, "Madam, I believe you have my seal muff on your arm!"

"Madam," I replied, "this muff happens to belong to me."

"Madam," rejoined the stranger, "have you two seal muffs?"

Imagine my horror and embarrassment upon looking down to discover that I did indeed have two muffs, one on each arm. E. W. L.

How to Use the Patterns

This department appears every day in the Daily Tribune.

SILK alpaca would be a good material to use in making a dress by pattern No. 2065. It is a tailored looking design, and the long lines will make it particularly becoming to the full figure. The plaited sides will give ample room to walk in easily and will take away from that too tight appearance that one sometimes sees in plain skirts on stout women.

Alpaca ravels badly, so it will be wise to allow a little more than the usual seam allowances and then to overcast or bind all edges as soon as possible. The long, one piece sleeves are slashed near the lower edges—gathered and joined—giving the effect of wristbands. The manner in which the collar extends beyond the rolled back front edges is another unusual feature, and both make for attractiveness in the finish of the dress.

The most difficult part of making this dress will be to lay the plaits, but this needn't be hard if done in the right way. Perforations are made on the pattern, showing exactly how to lay these plaits, and a basting thread or French chalk should be used to mark each perforation. After the pattern is removed, start with the plait nearest the middle of the front and pin in place from the top down. Look at the wrong side and see that the fold on the under side is as smooth as the one on top, and then baste in place from the top to the bottom. Any twist, even a slight one, must be taken out before basting. Do this with each plait, and leave the bastings in until the dress is finished. In the back, start with the plait nearest the middle on each side and do the same as with the front.

Pattern No. 2059 is a decidedly smart looking suit for a small boy and one that will be certain to please. There is a blouse, made to be slipped on over the head and having a shield and an inside pocket, and the sleeves may be made long or short. The trousers are straight—in two pieces—and button to the blouse.

Mercerized cotton poplin is one of the best materials for a suit of this kind. It launders beautifully, is a desirable weight, and comes in beautiful colors. A pongee shade, or a dark blue or brown, for instance, trimmed with narrow mercerized braid, is bound to be pleasing. If something warmer is desired, there is serge or wool jersey—either one of which will look well and not be difficult to work with.

Another pretty way to make this suit would be to use the finest quality of white pique for the blouse, and make the trousers of a heavy quality of dark blue or tan linen.

Pattern No. 1863 is for one of those enveloping aprons that most women need. It is easy to make, easy to get into and out of, and should wash and iron easily—all good points.

The pattern is in one piece, and the back laps over the front at the sides, and buttons there. Sateen, percale or gingham will make up well. The edges should be faced with shaped pieces. A single row of feather stitching or chain stitching outlining the neck and sides from top to bottom would be pretty, and one could add a patch pocket, if desired. A single initial, or a monogram embroidered on the left side of the upper front, would be most attractive.

Mothers know a dose of

SYRUP PEPSIN

Will keep them fit

'First Aid' For Sick Children

THE experienced mother is not alarmed when a child becomes sick. She knows that most of the ailments of childhood are trifling. If it seems serious she calls a doctor, but whether or not she calls him she gives, first of all, a good laxative medicine. The doctor would advise that anyway. It is his "first aid." Such experienced mothers as Mrs. Everett E. Hunt of Belzoni, Okla., who has three children and never any sickness, and Mrs. F. B. Kuklenski of Prosser, Wash., always give Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at the first indication of sickness. Such timely doses have saved them much worry.

The Meaning of "Good"

All doctors agree that a thorough cleaning out of the bowels is of first importance for it removes dangerous intestinal poisons. They will also advise a "good laxative," and by "good" they mean one that is effective and yet harmless. They know that there are physics that never should be given to children—calomel, which is mercury and loosens the teeth; phenolphthalein, a coal-tar drug that causes skin trouble; salts, which concentrate the blood and dry up the saliva. They consider Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin safe for all ages as they know it is a simple vegetable compound of Egyptian senna with pepsin and agreeable aromatics. The formula is on the package.

Give Laxative for Colds

Adults should have at least one movement of the bowels every 24 hours, and children two or three. Failure to have it means constipation, then headache, biliousness, drowsiness, lack of appetite. Give a dose of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at bedtime, and there will be health and good feeling by morning. A dose costs less than a cent, and a bottle can be had at any drug store. Colds and constipation come together, so if you notice coughing or sneezing stop it at once with Syrup Pepsin.

Curl Hair This Way and Keep It Healthy

It has been found that the use of a harmless fluid which druggists know as "Silmerine" will keep the straightest hair in curl for the longest time, giving to the appearance of true naturalness, besides keeping the hair softer and glossier than possible with the heated iron. The liquid should be applied with a brush before doing up the hair. A few ounces of liquid Silmerine will last for months, and as it is really beneficial to the hair it should be generally obtainable by the fair sex. It will not stain or discolor scalp or hair, and it's not greasy or sticky. It is fine for stimulating the growth.

Cocoanut Oil Fine for Washing Hair

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Many soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much free alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo (which is pure and entirely greaseless) is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this cannot possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. Two or three teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excess oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy, wavy, and easy to manage.

You can get Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and a few ounces will last everyone in the family for months.

THE AWAKENING.

DEAREST: As I am sitting here tonight, thinking of the day I first met you; I remember so well that morning, a morning cold and gray and gloomy, and matching the shadows and loneliness in my own life; and then, like some bright vision of loveliness, you came.

O, my darling, in the joy and rapture that your coming brought me, I forgot my gray, colorless existence, and entered into the bright sunlight of new life and hope, and became a willing slave of love and you.

I remember the hours and days we spent together—happy days—and, then came the awakening from the dream; that day when I told you I loved you and begged you to be mine; although I had not much to offer you except an honorable name and a pure love.

Anna May, darling, do you remember that as we talked, you unconsciously pulled a flower to bits and cast it from you? Even so, your answer tore my heart in pieces and I wonder that you did not hear the throbs of pain when you told me that it could never be; that you were pledged to another.

I do not want to pain you with this letter, but I am leaving for the west tomorrow. I cannot stay and see you become the bride of another, and I want to say good-by.

In my dreams I shall always hear your voice and see your face; and not alone in my dreams, for you are forever enshrined in my life and soul.

Dearest, wherever you are or wherever you go, remember that my love for you is the only real and lasting thing in my life, and my constant wish is for your happiness. ALFRED.

Tinting Furniture the Kyanize Way—with Celoid

YOU CAN DO IT YOURSELF

Of course you've noticed how popular "painted furniture" is becoming. Bedroom sets, sun parch furniture and, in fact, things for every room in the house are displayed by the best shops in "painted" beauty.

Why don't you make over some of your old things in this new way? This is a marvelous finish—this Celoid—a really high grade medium-gloss enamel that gives the effect of a costly "hand rubbed" finish. It may be washed repeatedly without leaving streaks or stains—in fact, it improves with washing.

In addition to tinting furniture use Celoid on any woodwork on walls of metal, wood, plaster or fibre-board, or anywhere about the house.

Eight delicately-toned tints in addition to Pure White. We guarantee absolute satisfaction or "money back for the empty can."

What's Wrong Here?

Answer below.

It's a Bobber Shop Now

"Newt Whaley, Barber Shop," was what we read upon his sign
When Newt unlocked at 6 a. m. and closed at night at 9.
It use' to be worth while—that shop; a feller could drop in
An' trade the latest racin' dope while Newt scraped on his chin.
But times has changed—an' Newt's changed, too; upon his wall you see
A gilt edged sign of "Ladies' Hours from 10 a. m. to 3."

A body use' to have a chance to rest a while in there,
An' chaw his fine cut while he talked with some one in Newt's chair.
We kep' up with th' baseball scores, and argued politics—
But times has changed—an' times that was an' times that is won't mix!
Newt Whaley ain't th' same at all; he's gettin' pretty gay,
An' wears his Sunday suit to work, all spruced up, every day.

One mornin' he was settin' there—three, four of us, you know—
With Jerry Holcomb tellin' us about a burlesque show
He'd seen th' week before, while he was on a little trip,
When in walked that school teacher—she's a pretty little snip.
She climbed into Newt Whaley's chair in front of all our mob—
Says, businesslike as all get out, "I want a shingle bob!"

Newt looked at us—we looked at him . . . He took an' cut her hair,
An' 'fore that day was over there was three more come in there.
It wasn't long till Saturday—them wimmen—I be durn!
They kept ol' Newt so busy that no man could get a turn.
An' Newt! Doggone his treachery; he swept his shop out clean
An' had his wife put fancy shades behind th' window screen.

Well, one by one we quit Newt's place; we won't loaf there again
Until he learns there's got to be some place reserved for men!
Why, all th' time th' wimmenfolks keeps goin' in his door—
An' now he's got the walls all cleaned, an' rugs put on th' floor.
He's turnin' sissy, too! Last time I went in, wha' 'd he say
But: "Will you try a Russian clip or classic bob today?"

Saloons is gone; th' blacksmith shop's a big garage place now;
Th' farmers wear white collars an' buy gas to run th' plow.
Th' grocery ain't got no chairs where fellers can set down—
There ain't a single place a man can loaf an' talk in town.
It won't be long until some day we'll see th' worst, an' stop
To read a new sign on Newt's door—"Newt Whaley—Bobber Shop!"

WILBUR D. NESBIT.

ANSWER TO WHAT'S WRONG HERE

No matter how numerous the attendance at a party, one should never leave without bidding one's hostess adieu. To do so is a breach of etiquette which is becoming more prevalent without being less excusable.

Gas Ranges that Make Canning Easy

THERE are six makes of gas ranges equipped with the famous Lorain Oven Heat Regulator—a device that measures and automatically controls the heat of the oven.

Women who own these wonderful stoves, with heat-regulated ovens, are able to perform many unusual feats in cookery.

Take canning for instance! The woman who owns a Lorain-equipped Gas Range finds it easy and economical to can one quart or a hundred quarts of fruit by using the Lorain Oven Method.

She merely prepares the fruits in the usual manner. Then she packs them cold in ordinary glass jars. Then she fills the jars with boiling water or syrup. Next, she loosely adjusts the lids and places the jars on the oven racks.

The Lorain Oven Canning Chart (you can obtain a free copy from any Lorain dealer) tells at what temperature to set the Red Wheel of the Regulator, and how long to leave the jars in the oven.

The Lorain Oven Canning Method

So, she lights the oven, sets the Red Wheel at the correct temperature, and goes about her other household tasks.

Within an hour or so, she returns to the kitchen, removes the jars from the oven, tightens the lids, inverts the jars, and her canning is done. (The several steps are here illustrated in their order, from top to bottom.)

Fruits canned in this manner retain most of their original firmness, color, and flavor. Moreover, they keep indefinitely.

This new and better way to can is only one of many things that the Lorain Oven Heat Regulator with its automatic temperature-control makes possible.

Just think what it means to be able to obtain perfect results every time you bake biscuits, cakes, pies and bread. Yet that's exactly what you can do with one of these remarkable gas stoves.

And again, you can place a Whole Meal in the oven in the early afternoon, set the Red Wheel at a low temperature, and go visiting for several hours. When you return at dinner time you will find your entire evening meal, (soup, meat, vegetables and dessert), deliciously done, hot, and ready to serve.

Sold By Thousands of Dealers—On Terms

Lorain-equipped Gas Ranges are sold all over the United States by Gas Companies, Furniture Stores, Stove Dealers, Hardware Stores and Department Stores—most of which will sell you a Lorain-equipped Gas Range on Easy Terms. All of them will gladly demonstrate any of the features mentioned in this advertisement.

If It's Done With Heat, You Can Do It Better With Gas

One easy turn of the Lorain Red Wheel gives you a choice of 44 measured and controlled oven heats for any kind of oven cooking or baking

Look for the Red Wheel

THE Lorain Oven Heat Regulator is the original oven heat-regulating device. It is the invention of American Stove Company. It is manufactured entirely by American Stove Company. It is built into only those gas ranges made by the several divisions of American Stove Company. It is unconditionally guaranteed by American Stove Company. Accept no substitute. Look for the Red Wheel.

Proved by World-wide Usage

Lorain-equipped Gas Ranges are not new and untried. Thousands upon thousands are in use all over the world. They are used in more than 1000 of the leading educational institutions in America to teach perfect cookery to the Housewives of Tomorrow.

Lorain-equipped Gas Ranges have the approval of Good Housekeeping Institute, Priscilla Proving Plant, New York Tribune Institute. They are used in the laboratories of dozens of manufacturers of high-grade food products, and are endorsed by all recognized cookery authorities.

Look for the REDWHEEL

WHEN gas is not available, oil is the most satisfactory cooking fuel provided you use an oil stove equipped with Lorain High Speed Burners, which apply a clean, odorless, intense heat directly against the cooking utensil.

The Last Word in Paris Fashions

FORMAL AND INFORMAL EVENING CLOTHES.

By Bettina Bedwell.
[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS.—(Special Correspondence.)—Nights in Paris! Paris clothes! American jazz! Gaiety and laughter! Little lights twinkling in the Bois! Montmartre setting up a garish competition to the dying sun! Bright gowns, smart wraps, and brilliant scarves glimpsed from limousines stopping at Ciro's and other magnetic rendezvous for the fashionable in the little Rue Damou! There is an enchantment about this melange of France, America, and the rest of the world congregated in the most fascinating of cities!

Travel tired tourists—and there are thousands of them coming at the Gare Saint-Lazare every week now—usually get their first glimpses of Paris in the evening. A kind providence, aided by the boat companies, has arranged it thus, so that your first impression of Paris is quite as thrilling as you thought it would be, back home, when you read those intriguing stories of old Paris, together with the latest folders of some gigantic steamship company, presenting a word picture so fascinating that it stampeded the dollars in your pretty purse, in their anxiety to do you the service of getting you to Paris in the shortest order.

As the traditional red taxi whisks you away from the gare with a speed incomprehensible in a vehicle so wheezing and ancient, you get your first glimpse of the Parisienne, with her background of the Avenue de l'Opera, the Rue de la Paix, the Place Vendome, the Place de la Concorde, and the Champs-Elysees, a brief and unsatisfactory glimpse of one of those inimitable Paris "ensembles" about which you have heard so much, and which certainly merit the trouble of stopping the autocratic chauffeur to permit a close study of just how the Parisienne manages to look that way. However, there is always plenty of time for this, because springtime in Paris furnishes unlimited opportunities to see Paris clothes in all the places one is sure to go.

Last Sunday I went to the premiere of the racing season at Longchamps, where I saw pretty Leonora Hughes wearing her latest spring coat and a chic little hat, side by side with a Parisian duchess, in a black fulgurante ensemble, a black hat fitting closely her shingled head and decorated with a single gilded parrot's head. These women formed two high lights in a scene where there were so many new Paris clothes to be seen, it was practically impossible for visitors to absorb and digest them all.

In the Bois, at Armenonville, I again saw these women in their newest frocks for the evening. At such a place one invariably sees pretty American girls, wearing the beloved beaded shifts which reappear each season, no matter what novelties Paris couturiers have offered us.

Lucien Lelong transforms sea-green chiffon into a robe. Suggesting the sports element by delightful embroidery. Fringes of ostrich edge this lovely lame evening wrap. Singing the song of simplicity without being dull.

However, there are a great many other American women who prefer to discard beaded dresses, it seems to me, for I have never seen so many dresses of chiffon for dancing, and these naturally differ a little from the straight tubelike silhouette that is presented by beaded gowns.

However, it is not essential that chiffon dresses should be made on ampler lines. A great many chiffon frocks such as I have seen at Rene's are made tube down to the knees, and, from that point, ruffled or plaited in a delightful fullness. Other chiffon gowns depend for their fullness upon thick, soft, and luxuriant fringes or draperies of ostrich which are quite often applied on the dress.

Chiffon is also combined frequently with other fabrics and we have, in this combination, a return of drapery which is kept subdued this season so that the silhouette may remain slender and not broken to any appreciable extent. However much the straight silhouette appears in dance frocks, it is always an illusion rather than an actuality, as the dance frock invariably widens in an expert fashion to allow the freedom necessary for the rhythmic movements of our syncopated dance measures. One wonders how the Parisian couturiers achieve this paradox of a straight line with plenty of fullness. It is true they do not always attempt to disguise the fullness in their models, but generally speaking they do. When dresses are cut short, as they are for the young girls, then you see the fullness quite obviously in the skirt, because it contributes so greatly to the graceful effect necessary to the short skirt.

Chiffon, by the slazy uncertainty of its texture, is not at all a practical fabric for evening, when one has not a dozen or so evening dresses, but there is no need to shed a single tear of regret if chiffon does not fit in gracefully with your wardrobe plans, because, despite its popularity, it is only one of the great many equally popular fabrics. Georgette, an infinitely more practical material, has all the effects of chiffon without its serious disadvantages. Crepe de chine, crepe satin, and fulgurante continue to be used more often than any other fabrics for evening, and quite rightly so, because they drape so beautifully, they have such an exquisite luster, and are, with it all, so practical.

This last quality may be described by those women who wear a gown just once, but for the great majority of us it is desirable, indeed, and I have noticed, too, that women with more dollars than could be counted in the short span of years allowed for a lifetime favor the crepe de chine evening gowns and crepe satin quite as decidedly as women to whom an evening dress is more or less an event.

Evening dresses for summer, of which I have been seeing a great many in the Grandes Maisons, show that drapery is once more fashionable. There is nothing lovelier for the mature women, or the women whose figure is not beautiful, and, if you are fortunate in having a beautiful figure, drapery certainly enhances it. Our first model is one of the latest draped evening dresses from Lucien Lelong. It is called "Algue," which is the French name for a little sea plant that grows under water, and everything about this dress suggests water in its most beautiful phases.

It is a delicate sea-blue-green, and combines a

A-MARKETING IN BALTIMORE.

BALTIMORE, Md.—[Special Correspondence.]—Oliver Wendell Holmes says something in one of his breakfast table books—I think it is—about Baltimore as a food town. And it is still notably that, although many places famed for markets in the genial autocrat's day have now lost them, and the famous dishes of these same cities or towns are also mainly a memory.

The Lexington public market in Baltimore is probably the most flourishing of any of the country, especially on Saturdays, when a street is vacated for blocks in order that farmers and others may set up their stalls in the open and bordering the block long market houses. In these houses there are some highly interesting features and not a few deplorable ones, so that at last I have been helped to settle on what I believe is the true reason why so many great city markets have disappeared. They were dirty. Modern sanitary sense has killed them. The town around them has died in some cases, but I am sure people will go a long way to a clean market.

No longer is the long promenade of the once famous Charleston, S. C., market house frequented. Where the governors of the market once conducted their business is now a sort of museum. A few poor stalls in that market do a little scattering business, but it is mainly colored persons who do the buying and selling. With its one long aisle, extending for several blocks, it must have been a fascinating place in the height of its glory.

Savannah Market Unlovely.

The great market house in Savannah is but thinly populated, now with colored people mainly, and is an unlovely place; yet it used to be one of the sights of the city. The moving out and moving in of such a place as the farmers' market I saw in Miami, which is held three mornings in the week, insures a cleanup, and, besides that, each display is small and compact and so unwasteful. I found that place in Miami altogether a delight, and I am not so easy to please, when it comes to food trading, as I might be. In spite of their strange and unknown products I was not in love with the large markets of Havana. Death and decay have overtaken the great central markets of Washington City.

The Lexington market in Baltimore is vastly interesting and educative, but it also is mighty insanitary in some parts. Its continued existence probably is due to the fact that Baltimore has the market habit. All classes frequent it. You hear a buyer leave a message for her chauffeur and you see a mother with her daughter of 6, each with a basket well filled.

It was a neat, serious eyed, 8 year old little colored girl that I first saw with a nice substantial willow basket to go with her mother's larger ones. And a little white girl had the same sort of one, while a white child of 10 was shopping alone with one of the large square baskets, so many of which I had seen on street cars and in the shopping center before I arrived at the market.

This square basket was well filled, but upon seeing some young onions the child suggested to my mind that she was a young Bernhardt, for she beat her breast and uttered "onions" with about four accents. She was evidently carrying her shopping list in her head, and had forgotten about the flavoring for the stew.

Food Needlessly Exposed.

The privilege of seeing so many of the products of the earth brought together is surely a great one, and good for child and adult although there is so much no one ought to tolerate. I wonder who buys the cooked hominy out of the great tubs with hideously dirty measuring tins on which the dust and dirt of the region grown wet and slimy is thick. How can anybody buy the jellied pig knuckles even more flagrantly exposed in great quantities, and in almost tub measures? Great cakes of scrapple, galantines, other sorts of meat loaves, butter and cheese, potato and vegetable salads of several sorts, bread and cake and pickles, and acres of candy are exposed in the long and crowded aisles of the market, to acquire all the dirt that flies, and some that is more or less solidified on dirty hands. I saw a pile of slaw handled in the dirtiest manner possible, and an old man was ready to sell much cut and exposed cheese while he smoked and expectorated broadcast.

Yet neatness is appreciated here, for a small and compact stall where fresh roasted pork shoulder, fried mush, meat loaves, and such foods were compactly cared for had a crowd around it waiting for the big immaculately clad man in the little standing place behind to wait upon them. And out in the sunshine, where the farmers set up their stalls to sell all sorts of greens, vegetables, eggs and smoked meats, only here and there does there seem to be insanitary conditions with foods too dirty to be purchased by even the most careless.

The approach to the market is lined for half a block or more with flowers and flowering plants, a lovely and wonderful display.

Shaved Coconuts.

In prominent places, or by the entrances to Lexington market, one sees something new under the sun in the treatment of coconuts. The shell has been cracked off—often or generally without cracking the meat—and the brown inner lining or cover of the white meat is scraped off, and the scraped ball, set up in a glass can or cans at various heights, makes a most picturesque display, though undoubtedly a wasteful one. These really look like great white lily buds, or Parian marble fruits, and I am told—and believe it—that this preparation of the coconut is entirely Baltimorean.

Much coconut is grated, and in one case the grated nut falls into great drawers, from which it is constantly sold by scoopfuls, 10 cents for two scoops.

The Coconut Shaver.

The utensil or tool used to scrape the coconuts is that once used by the wagon maker, but now in but small demand, we may guess—a spoke shaver, which is a piece of turned wood with a knife fastened on one side. Envy for the owners of this tool did not arise in my heart at once, and only after I began to realize what admirable and novel coconut desserts might be set up by using these shaved meats did I seek to purchase the tool, which I did not even know the name of. I had trouble, but finally I bought one which had seen a good morning's work, at least, or many.

Test of a Living Market.

I would almost place as a test of a live market one where all the sellers keep busy at something, if it is only in protecting their goods and setting them up attractively. In the Lexington market there are many busy persons. A boy was diligently shaving the first coconuts I had ever seen thus treated, at 10 o'clock in the morning, and he was just as diligently at work at 2 in the afternoon, when the crowd—a Saturday afternoon crowd—had greatly increased. And along with the coconut scraping and grating and selling went the scraping and grating of horseradish. These two commodities seemed to be combined in every case, in the different parts of the vast market.

Oyster Crumbing.

In the stalls where oysters are sold—it is April when I am writing this—there was great industry. Square pans of breaded oysters were constantly being prepared even when no great kettle of hot fat was at hand for their frying. While I did not feel that the crumbs being used were what I should like to eat—too gray—it was interesting to see each crumber take up handfuls of crumbs, fish an oyster out of a dish with a fork, cover it with crumbs, then clasp her hands together and produce what looked like a little turnover, which she set up in the pan. Those crumbled by the most expert were exceedingly uniform, and often two small oysters instead of one were inside those raw turnovers. The crumbing hands were not wet, and no crumbs wasted on that account, as is the case often in home work.

Philadelphia Scrapple.

The scrapple on sale in Lexington market was not of a sort we get by following the recipes even in the most authoritative books, though I doubt if I should like what is presumably the real thing as well as I like what I make myself. This of the market is as gray as clay, or a shade or two darker than clay. The explanation of this seems to be that white cornmeal only is used and that a great deal of sage and other dried herbs—you can buy bunches of sage and other dried herbs here—go into it.

Cress Greens.

All the way up and down the Atlantic coast from Georgia here there is a sort of watercress that grows much like a dandelion, and is dug the same way for greens and sold for 10 or 15 cents a pound in the market. I saw this growing in a dry and neglected yard in Charleston. I think it requires less care than kale, and I wonder why it is not sold except where it grows, and why it may not be grown almost anywhere. The cresses are an interesting family, which I am always delighted to know more about. As an edible garnish, they have no rival among the green bits. And you get the vitamines from them!

Turnip Greens.

In the books which give the recipes for cooking turnip greens I have never seen mentioned the fact that these are blanched. They are, indeed, the tops of turnips which have sprouted in the dark. The farmers bring these to market here, but I know they are wasted elsewhere. The Brussels sprout greens are green, and are probably the weeded out parts of what is planted for summer growing, these being weeded out as are beet plants, which make superb greens when young and succulent.

Novelties in Meat.

Smoked pork jowl, tongue included is a novelty to me. It is inexpensive. Tripe and chitterlings and pig's tails are not seen everywhere commonly, as they seem to be here, and there is also hung up in some meat stalls what the English call a "faggot," or the pig's windpipe and gullet with liver, lung and heart attached. The poor in the city of Manchester, England, get three family meals out of this—stews and hashes.

Fish.

Of course, it is wonderful to find 30 cent shad in great quantities and shad roe in wasteful display, but it is what one would expect in Baltimore, where the scallops one gets in the "inns" are as sweet—well, unbelievably sweet and dainty.

HOW TO MAKE RHUBARB JAM

Delicious and Healthful
By Ann Proctor

Rhubarb jam made according to the following recipe is one of the most delicious things you have ever tasted. Children and "grown-ups" go wild over it and it is so good for them.

To make eleven 8-ounce glasses of rhubarb jam:—

Cut the rhubarb into short lengths, without peeling, and shred by putting through grinder or chopping very fine. Put 4 leveled cups (2 lbs.) of shredded rhubarb and its juice and 7½ leveled cups (3¾ lbs.) of sugar into a preserving kettle, mix well and bring to a vigorous boil stirring constantly, and let boil 3 minutes. Remove from fire and add 1 bottle (scant cup) CERTO while stirring. Let stand one minute, skim and pour into glasses. CERTO, the pure concentrated jelly-making principle of fruit, contains no gelatine or preservative, and is obtainable at all grocers.

The above recipe and nearly 100 others for making delicious jellies and jams by the "CERTO Process" is found in the CERTO Book of Recipes, a copy of which comes with every bottle of CERTO. Extra copies will be sent free if you write to the Douglas Pectin Corporation, Rochester, N. Y.

Important: Use Certo this year in making all your jams and jellies. They will keep splendidly. Certo always saves time, worry and boiling. The Certo Process never fails, and costs less because you make jam and jelly from the juice and flavor that used to be boiled away.

BY A. T. GALLICO.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—It was only a few years ago that the man who went into the hat stores on the day appointed by custom and the newspapers to purchase his straw hat for the summer was confronted with two alternatives. He could buy the regulation straw sailor for the regulation price or he could invest in a panama for a fancy sum. And that was that.

If he was unfortunate enough to possess the kind of face which did not look well when peering out from under the brim of the sailor shape, why that was his hard luck. Rather than not buy a straw he went around the whole summer with the sincere conviction that he looked funny. Nine times out of ten he did.

Of late hat manufacturers have been more and more emphasizing the idea of selling the customer a hat to fit his face. They figure it is as easy to make becoming hats as it is to make unbecoming ones, and that if the buyer is pleased with the general results of his purchase, he will buy more frequently. A man who must go through the severe mental strain of having a series of unbecoming lids clamped on to his brow by cajoling salesmen is not eager to repeat the experience.

Thus today, when you make up your mind to buy your straw hat, you should realize you can find exactly the hat and the shape that best fits your face. And you need buy no other. In fact, fashion has loosened up to such a degree that if you do not feel like it you need not buy one at all. Some men wear lightweight felt hats all summer. This article, however, is directed at those who change.

You probably haven't kept last summer's hats. One seldom does, although they do clean. But there is something about a new straw hat that a last year's one does not supply, no matter how well the cleaner did the job. At least one new straw at the opening of the season gives a man a well dressed feeling.

We say one because, although fashion decrees that a man can find work for at least three straw hats in a season, he will not need to replace all three at once. Perhaps the sport leghorn you got last summer and found less occasion to wear than you expected is good enough for another summer, or the china split straw hat that you got for evening wear may still have an evening or so of life in it.

The sailor for street and business wear, whether it is a sennit or a fancy weave hat, is the one that gets the wear. Generally around the middle of the summer one decides that another new one will freshen up one's outfit, and thus the procession of straw hats goes on.

As suggested above, three straw hats of different types are the least one should have in one's wardrobe. For street the rough sennit is more popular in New York than the fancy weaves, although the latter are considered correct enough. It is just that men have got so into the habit of wearing sennits that they won't try anything else. The fancies, when they are chosen, are often in the browner tones than the bleached color of the regular sennits. When the well dressed man does choose a fancy straw, he does not favor the thick edges that are sometimes seen on the fancier hats.

The brims this year are generously wide, in keeping with the vogue for full trousers. Which reminds us to drop the hint that if you are wearing these full trousers and broad shouldered coat, be sure your straw hat is sufficiently wide of brim to top off the effect, as a narrow brimmed hat looks foolish with full clothes.

The crowns of hats are quite high, with the ribbon bands coming up higher than usual. Simple tailored bows are preferred. On the strictly street hats, extremely fancy braids will not be sponsored by the smart dresser. Simple effects like navy blue striped with tan or brown, or navy and dark green stripes, will be used with the business straws, but the brilliant club or college stripes will be reserved for the golf courses, on leghorn straws, or coarse sennits.

The favorite straw sport hat is the leghorn. There are two shapes of this hat that will be especially popular this summer. One is the semi-alpine, of natural color, trimmed with brown draped band. The brim may be worn turned down all round, thus making an excellent shade from the sun, which in a sport hat is one of the first requisites. The other shape we had in mind is the hat turned down in front only, in the manner of the snap brim felt hats. These leghorns may be worn with the crepe bands, or with fancy striped bands, as mentioned above. They are for sport only, and are as light and comfortable as one can desire.

THE STRAW HAT SEASON IS WITH US AGAIN

The straw hat for the evening is another story. We refer to the proper hat for wear with dinner coat. If the evening costume is white flannels, or some other semi-formal outfit, it is not necessary to have a special straw hat to go with it. But with tuxedo, smart dressers are going to use a finer hat than the one they wear with street clothes.

The three hats that will be most seen of an evening at country clubs and yacht clubs, or on private verandas between dances, are the China split straw, the fine weave sennit, and the pencil edge Milan. The last mentioned will have the least followers, but it is a good summer evening hat, being extremely light in weight and flexible.

The evening straws are always trimmed with a black band, which is effective when of taffeta or silk to match the facings on the dinner coat or the bow tie or both, when tie and facings match, as is often the case with smartly dressed men.

WOMEN THE WORLD OVER

As a mark of beauty, some African women stretch their lips to an enormous size.

London has two large hospitals which were founded by women and are entirely staffed by women.

In Holland many of the young women who marry are working girls, and they keep right on working.

Mlle. Spinelli, noted French actress, is a great lover of animals, and recently remarked that she preferred them to men.

Women's agricultural institutes in England and Wales now number nearly 2,000, with an estimated membership of 160,000.

Kentucky's three women dry agents refuse to carry firearms, relying on smiles for weapons, which have proven effective.

The South Dakota Supreme court has upheld the law setting a maximum of fifty-four hours a week for employed women and children.

The Women's Symphony orchestra of Philadelphia, composed of fifty-five women, is one of the most unique musical organizations in the world.

Of the thirty-seven women members of the soviets of the Russian union only two have full voting powers, the remaining thirty-five merely having consultive voice.

St. Louis has two women street commissioners, Miss Belle Devlin and Miss Olive Bruggoman having recently been appointed to these odd posts.

Miss Dorothy Gee, in charge of the credit and oriental loans department of a San Francisco bank, is said to be the only Chinese woman banker in the world.

IN TIME FOR SPRING.

BREAKFAST room sets are evoking a great deal of interest now that spring is here and the breakfast-room-sun-porch is coming into more steady use. Manufacturers have been busily employed in working out new ideas, and bettering old ones, in this particular line of furniture. Their show rooms are exhibiting lovely things.

One of the most recent conceptions, placed on the market for the first time in January, is a set of birchwood, in French walnut finish. The wood is beautifully grained, and the color is a soft, golden tan. A slight Spanish influence is shown in the style of the furniture. Wrought iron fixtures and horizontally striped window draperies in rich, Spanish colors are to be used with it, and there is to be a fiber rug, patterned in black.

Noticeable among others is a set which has been enameled light gray. Edges of the pieces are outlined with dull blue. On the drops of the gate leg table, a design of nasturtiums, in bright reds, yellows, and orange, with jade green leaves, is painted. This design is repeated on the splats of the chairs and on the drawers of a little serving table. Woodwork is painted gray and walls are calcimined light yellow. Sash curtains of red are of the same color, with a border embroidered in nasturtium colored worsteds. They are hung on the rods by means of small, jade green rings. Woven strips of felt, in blue and gray, make the rug. The delightfully gay effect is bound to create a feeling of optimism.

Bright Chinese blue has been chosen as the color for enameling an interesting set. It is edged with narrow stripes of Indian red. Cream colored dishes have simple borders of the same dull red. Walls are intense lemon yellow. Woodwork is Chinese blue. The floor has been painted a darker shade of blue and there are no rugs. At the windows lemon yellow tarlatan curtains are stitched at the hems with colored worsteds.

Furniture and curtains decked with a motif of nasturtiums.

Pleasing in combination is the color scheme of another set. The pieces are enameled in straw color, edged in jade green, and there are decorative motifs, interestingly applied, in copper color, turquoise, olive green, and mauve. Vertically striped silk gauze at the windows repeats these colors, adding hairlines of black. This black note is further carried out in the painting of the woodwork and the floor. There is a deep amethyst rug. Novel, and quite unusual, is the treatment of the lighting fixture. A small black shade conceals an electric bulb which shines down on a clear glass bowl, containing seaweed and gold fish! The bowl is suspended by means of wrought iron chains, which hook at the ends into the turned top of the bowl. The ceiling is moderately low, so that the bowl may be reached comfortably. The effect is fully fascinating.

Black is exceptionally popular. Relieving the somberness of an otherwise too black set are the rush seats of the six chairs. Fine gilt lines edging the pieces repeat the straw colored note of the chair seats. A gateleg table has oblong drop leaves, so that when both are opened the table is square. A design of fruits is dully polychromed on each piece. Old gold silk gauze, piped with jade green taffeta, is used for curtains. There is a black chenille rug. Jade green enamel has been used on the woodwork, and the walls are done in two-toned straw colored paper showing a large floral and leaf design.

Another black set has had its enamel rubbed to a high gloss. Each piece is decorated with a wide band of sapphire blue, edged with narrow gilt stripes. At regular intervals a conventional tangerine colored flower with three leaf green leaves is introduced. The chairs are cane seated, enameled black, and the oval gateleg table is of the extension type, so that additional leaves may be inserted. A Chinese patterned rug, with touches of burnt orange, leaf green, old ivory, and black, on a blue ground, is used in conjunction. Walls and woodwork are in two tones of old ivory. Natural colored casement cloth hangs at the windows. It is edged with narrow upholsterer's fringe in sapphire blue, with a faint suggestion of tangerine in the heading.

High lighted and rubbed at the edges to imitate old, worn pieces, is a set of brown mahogany. There is a Welsh dresser with two drawers. On this jade pink china is displayed to good advantage. A refectory table has a drop leaf at each end, so that it may be made quite long. This type of table is especially well suited to a long narrow room, where square or oval tables would hardly seem to fit. The accompanying chairs are fan-back Windsors. In addition to the refectory table, in this set, is a small, tuck-away table. When the gate leg is turned back, the oval top may be tipped, so that the whole thing is quite flat, and may easily be slipped behind a door, or put into the closet when not in use. It is a decidedly convenient little extra table to have around the house, and may be bought separate from the set, to be used in living rooms, bedrooms, etc. Draperies of glazed chintz, in an old fashioned floral pattern, are pleasingly in keeping with this style of furniture. Glass curtains are of old ivory voile. A deep mulberry rug is used.

Quite novel is the table arrangement of another brown mahogany set. There are two semi-oval tables. These may be used in several different combinations. One has a wide drop leaf, squared. The two semi-ovals may be fitted together to make a moderate sized oval table; the leaf may be lifted, and the other oval attached to the squared edge, to form a long oval; or the squared leaf, raised, may be placed against a wall or window, when there are only two people to be seated at the table, leaving the other piece to be used as a console.

bodice of chiffon with a skirt and drapery of fulgurante, the shimmering quality of which, as it drapes from right hip to the left shoulder in back, resembles a fall of water. In this particular dress the length of fulgurante begins at the right hip, passes in an intricate spiral around the skirt, and drapes in the fall you can see across the back. Combining two materials so opposed as chiffon and fulgurante looks to the laymen as simple as the card tricks the vaudeville magician explains to you to show how clever he is, and it is actually just as difficult. You can see how Lucien Lelong has harmonized these fabrics in this model by means of circular motifs of iridescent beads and lines of these beads extending irregularly up the waist. These lines of beads look much like the little lines of lights which the moonlight casts on rivers at night.

Our second model is for the piquant disrespectful young lady whose years are no more than eighteen. It is all well for mother to go about in blue-green drapery, but the debutante loves sophisticated black or some other equally daring tones. This model was designed by Mme. Vallet of Martial and Armand, with a particularly sympathetic understanding of the modern young girl. She calls it "Olympiade," with some thought, I suppose, of the pending Olympic games, and she chooses to suggest concretely the sports element by delightful embroideries on the sides of the bodice; one side shows a tiny pugilist about to administer a knockout to his opponent and the other shows the pugilist's best girl looking on admiringly from a bench in the stadium. These embroideries are simply made in bright colors, with red, yellow, and green predominating.

The black fulgurante of which the dress is made is an excellent background to display these fantastic figures. The waist line of this model wanders up and down the silhouette as if undecided whether to be high or low and compromising on being both; it is high in front and quite low in back. True, the line is no more than a row of stitching which fastens the circular tunic onto the dress, but it is significant of the foregasted change in our belt line. The circular tunic, which really is practically a skirt, has a flat triangular panel in front that does a great deal to enhance the charm of the skirt, because it eliminates the aggravating habit circular skirts have of bulging in front. This debutante dress is sleeveless and has a round neck, somewhat modified by a white chiffon scarf.

The third model, which the artist has allowed to dominate the center of the stage, is an evening wrap, made of lame with colors, as well as gold. It is draped in an intricate fashion on the right side and is trimmed with heavy fringes of ostrich shading from pale yellow to deep orange. The collar fastens tight about the neck so it looks like a ruff rather than a collar. The sleeves are wide and edged with ostrich fringes completed by a band of brilliants in criss-cross design. Nowhere is there an obvious fastening to this wrap, but it is attached by buttons and loops underneath the ostrich drapery at the right side.

Draped wraps such as this are being used a great deal, and I see many of them at fashionable resorts in the Bois, at the opera, and other places where smart women meet this spring. They are still wearing the straight wraps which have dominated Paris coat production for the last two seasons, but draped wraps are newer, and therefore to the seekers after novelty a bit more desirable. They have a classic appearance which adds a great deal to their elegance.

The last model is an informal evening and dinner dress created by Yteb. It sings the song of simplicity without being dull. The tubelike tunic of this dress is made of white crepe satin, and the circular underskirt of black crepe satin. The tunic is finished by a circular flounce of white silk lace, very heavy, so that one only gets an occasional glance of the black underneath. The circular lower skirt make the dress a delight for dancing, and the simplicity of its cut and color scheme really puts it in the all round class. It is the kind of dress that you could wear at an informal dinner, a country club dance, or a real ball. The round neck and arm holes are finished by narrow pipings of white crepe satin. The scarf which our artist has sketched is specially designed to accompany such a dress; it is, in this case, of black chiffon, having pointed ends finished with deep pointed bands of silver and a long fringe of ostrich which is a mixture of black and white. The scarf is worn by the Parisienne as a part of the dress and is not removed upon entering the house. On the contrary, it is either allowed to fall over the shoulders, as it does in the sketch, or is tied in a loose knot on one shoulder.

You can't go wrong with a scarf these days and there is no toilette too formal to admit it. The only thing you have to think about is keeping your scarf appropriate to your dress, and this is one of the easiest things to accomplish.

THIS fashionable MANICURE LASTS A WHOLE WEEK!

You need never apologize for your nails if you keep Glazo Liquid Polish handy on the dressing table. Apply Glazo lightly with a brush. Instantly it gives nails that fashionable shell-pink polish washing cannot mar.

A Glazo manicure lasts almost a week without bothersome buffing. The polish will not crack or peel and it prevents hangnails.

Now with GLAZO POLISH comes an equal quantity of POLISH REMOVER—so important to the most effective liquid manicure. Complete outfit in adorable twin bottles, 50c—all counters.

Are You Proud of Your Nails?

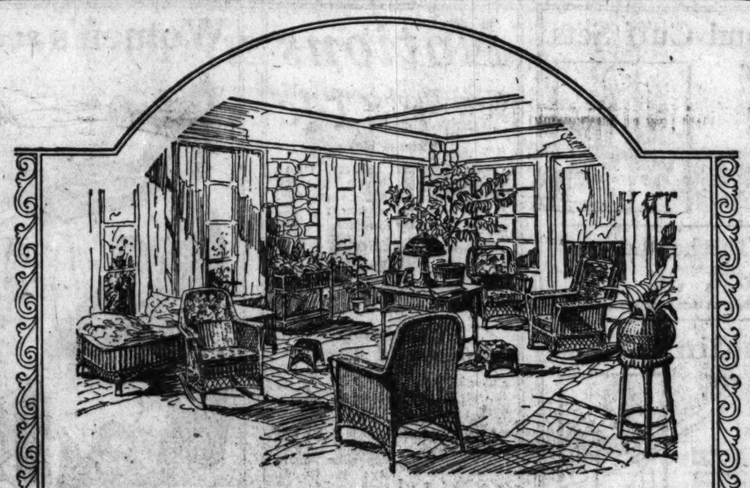
NO BUFFING—NAILS STAY POLISHED LONGER



Making it Easy to Choose Home Furnishings

Everyone knows what a great influence furnishings have upon the home. And all know, too, how difficult it often seems to get exactly what one wants, especially when located in a small community.

The PECK & HILLS Card of Introduction plan is an admirable solution to this problem. It makes the selection of good furniture an easy matter for all who take advantage of it.

Ask Your Neighborhood Furniture Dealer for Your Card of Introduction

This card, signed by a furniture dealer, permits you to visit, in person, PECK & HILLS wholesale display of fine furniture and floor coverings.

This enables you to choose from a great variety of models, yet you actually buy from your neighborhood dealer. He gets this business without the expense of carrying too large a stock, therefore he saves on overhead and other operating costs. These economies, added to others, enjoyed by the manufacturer in reduced distribution costs, make better values available to you.

FREE BOOK

Clip and mail to PECK & HILLS, 1353 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, and receive a free copy of our 32 page book, "Correct Care of Home Furnishings," telling just how to keep all kinds of furniture in best possible condition.

GOOD MORNING!

Looking for thrills? Well, step right over to the Randolph theater!

There a big, beautiful, black horse occupies the center of the screen. He woos your admiration with his magnificence. He astounds you with his intelligence. Your eye is charged, and you sense in this glorious, living, loving, pulsing piece of horse flesh a personality as real as a human could boast.

LEON BARY
Even wild horses eat out of his hand

Not exactly believing in Santa Claus, I would say that, without a doubt, many things were done in making this picture that do not show in the picture itself. Just the same—one should care! The effect is that of perfect naturalness.

The story carries you to a part of the country where, among mountains and plains, roams a big, black, unconquerable horse sheik whose siren whinny has the power to lure many a valuable mare from her home pasture.

For some time he has a rival in an arrogant white. Finally things come to a showdown, and Rex and the white, in the presence of their respective harems, fight it out. The white is vanquished—and vanishes into oblivion.

"For this," you are told by way of subtitle, "is the way of the land."

Finally He Meets His Master.

It is not necessary to say that scores of ambitious—and furious—cattle men have tried to catch the big black. It takes a forest fire and a man who understands the workings of the equine mind to subdue him. Once conquered, he is all his master's—or perhaps to put it more truly—the master is all his. The soft, keen eye of the dauntless roamer proves itself a great detective agency. And so Rex, king of wild horses, figures in adventure and love scenes.

The plot, in so far as it does not concern the star—Rex—is not unusual, occupies itself with a girl and a man; an aged father, a weakling brother, and a rogue of a ranch foreman, whose principal business consists in doing his employer out of live stock.

Rex, however, being in the picture, makes it a wonderful and "different" sort of photoplay. If you love animals—then the film at the Randolph is the film for you.

See you tomorrow!

Early Favorites of Movies Are to Bid Again for Fame

By Mildred Spain.

LOS ANGELES, Cal.—[Special Correspondence.]—Names you haven't heard of for years are again to blaze forth upon the electrics and under the Klieg.

With the new boom every one is staging a comeback. Our Club must look to its laurels and lipsticks, for that potent charmer, Theda Bara, is going to try for honors in "Déclassé." Theda has been busy socially in Hollywood for over a year, but she wouldn't say until recently just what her film plans were.

Pauline Bush, the wife of Allan Dwan, is also to be seen soon. Pauline is really a poor little rich girl. She has a suite at the Biltmore, cars and silken clothes, but no belief in herself. She was a famous actress before she was married to the director. They separated. But now just watch Pauline wallop that inferiority complex!

And Gertrude Robinson—remember her?—the second wife of James Kirkwood, wants to return to stardom—but not as Gertrude Robinson—no, indeed, as Gertrude Kirkwood. Gertrude Robinson was a good name when she was married to Kirkwood. Now that she gets alimony from him instead of an allowance she prefers Gertrude Kirkwood.

Pauline Frederick is dividing her time between the camera and the footlights. Anyway, Pauline looked perfectly gorgeous working on a Lubitsch set the other day. She was swathed in black shiny stuff, and net and jet formed a queenly head ornament. When Pauline was discovered in the audience of "Romance" at the opening performance, Will Rogers made her get up and bow to a wave of applause. She was in white Roma crêpe and rhinestones and a sable cape.

The house was crammed with the mighty of the movies that night—Mae Busch in black satin, escorted by an unknown who looks much like Norman Kerry; Pauline Garon, with Eddie Carewe ("bless their hearts," says Hollywood, real proud of its matchmaking propensities); Mae Murray, a dazzling picture of white and silver scarlet; Corinne Griffith in a costume of flame chiffon with a cape of the same material trimmed in ostrich tips.

The Terrible Truth About Mary.

But we were talking about comebacks, weren't we?

There's Mary Miles Minter. Why doesn't she come back?

That's what every one asked Mary when she and Jeannie McPherson lunched at the Ambassador the other day.

The truth is, Mary is getting terribly fat. That sounds cruel, but it fits the case nicely. Polite talk about adipose tissue doesn't describe Mary. She admits her life is all orange juice just now, not even a sliver of bread.

Mary has been living quietly in Pasadena under the name of Juliet Shelby.

Mary's maid is suing Mary for false arrest and asking damages. The maid said she was hired to take orders from Miss Minter-er Shelby—but that she found she had to obey a Dr. Raymond Mixsell, too. Mary had the maid arrested one night—and it was all too unfortunate.

Dr. Mixsell has been reported engaged to Mary many times in the last few months. He is an elderly man with a neat gray mustache and a little adipose tissue himself.

Colleen Moore is just wild to go to Paris. Her brother, Cleve Morrison, has entered the Olympic games and Colleen just knows he'll make a world's record at high diving.

Al Jolson, who hadn't danced in polite society for some eight years, captured the great silver and gold cup at the Ambassador's Cocoanut Grove dancing contest on Fri-

Club Women Organize to Put Ravinia Over

By Edward Moore.

COMMUNITY interest in the community service represented by Ravinia received an unexpected bit of evidence the other day from a man who has the habit of going to that delightful summertime haunt. He said he estimated there were at least 10,000 men who, like himself, went there with pleasure during the heated season, and of this number the vast majority, like himself, would be greatly bored at the thought of attending other musical observances elsewhere.

FRIEDA SAIGER

For a decade and more Mr. Eckstein has maintained with all eloquence that the basis of musical appreciation lies in the home. At all seasons he has been ready to argue that if Ravinia were to accomplish the purpose to which it was dedicated it must be more than a private enterprise, must belong to the people and be a factor in community life. Interest in its achievements, he insisted, must be stirred into being in the home, by wives and mothers, and through them to husband and children.

It would seem that his reasoning was accurate, for it led to the formation of the Ravinia club. This is an organization of 200 women of the north shore from Evanston to Waukegan, out of whose activities have come the Thursday afternoon children's concerts, and a general spreading of the gospel of the artistic and cultural values of the Ravinia opera and concerts. Mrs. Ralph Poole of Lake Bluff is its president; Mrs. Frank R. Greene of Winnetka, Miss Caroline Kirkland of Lake Forest, Mrs. George Lytton of Highland Park, and Mrs. William Sutherland of Glencoe its vice presidents; Mrs. Arthur Byfield of Highland Park its recording secretary; Mrs. George S. Parker of Winnetka its corresponding secretary, and Miss Juliette Brown of Lake Bluff its treasurer. The children's day committee consists of Mrs. Sutherland, chairman, and Mrs. Laird Bell of Winnetka, Mrs. Maurice Mandeville of Lake Bluff and Mrs. Annette Jones of Highland Park.

How to Prepare a Season.

A meeting of the club took place at the Moraine hotel, Highland Park, a few days ago, wherein Mr. Eckstein gave a behind the scenes view of what it means to prepare a Ravinia season. By word of mouth they traveled from the Chicago Federation of Musicians to the Metropolitan Opera house; to personal contact in homes, hotels, and apartments of stars; to the necessary contracts, the auditions, the nights at opera hearing prospective artists in actual performance; to the thousand details that must receive attention months before Ravinia is ready to open its gates to the public.

As a result, 200 members of the Ravinia club opened 200 offices in 200 homes, with the avowed policy that no north shore home shall be without a coupon book of admissions to Ravinia. When you, who live on the north shore, are invited to buy, it will be by one of the 200.

Great excitement prevailed in certain quarters of THE TRIBUNE when a telegraphic item came in from New York indicating that eighty-one out of a possible eighty-nine prin-

Texas Club Fails Dallas Little Theater Players

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—If any one down Texas way—or any one holding the honair of the Lone Star state close to heart—reads this, he, she, or they might write the Texas club of New York and ask its members what the Sam Houston they mean by treating the Dallas Little theater players the way they did last week.

We had a little theater tournament in New York. There were seventeen entries. Sixteen of them came from New York and its surrounding towns. One came from Dallas. Each of them presented a one-act play.

There were three $100 cash prizes and a Belasco trophy, which is the capital prize. The trophy is a banner, and there is a silver cup that is competed for each year. The winner keeps the banner and gets its name on the cup.

The Dallas amateurs offered a serious playlet entitled "Judge Lynch," and played it so well and staged it so competently that they won the banner, the cup, and $100.

But how did the Texas club rise to its opportunities as the logical host of the occasion? I'll tell you.

Each entry in the tournament agrees to take 100 seats for the night on which it appears. These they buy for $1.65 each and sell to their neighbors for $2.20 to help defray their expenses.

Dallas, of course, could not sell 100 seats in Dallas for a show they were going to give in New York, so they brought them down here and turned them over to the Texas club. And how many tickets do you think the club sold? Forty!

My goodness, but those Texas actors were chagrined and mad, and hurt. Fortunately their directors kept the sad news from them until after they had finished their play. They might not have won otherwise.

Second and third prizes went to the Alliance Players of New Jersey and the Gardens Players of Forest Hills, L. I. Next week, I hear, there are to be entries from Detroit and Pittsburgh, and Dallas is coming back. The tournament promises to take on a national importance soon.

"God's Chillun" Ready.

Before you read this you probably will have heard what, if anything, happened at the Provincetown playhouse on Thursday night. Then, if present plans are carried out, the much discussed Eugene O'Neill play, "All God's Chilluns Got Wings," will be produced as promised some months back, and with the cast of white and black actors originally announced.

Which means that Miss Mary Blair, as the wife of a young colored law student, played by Paul Robeson, the colored leading man, will kneel in gratitude at his feet and kiss his honest but heavily pigmented hand. This incident, we dare say, will be followed by some booing and more applause. And we await with some curiosity, not unmixed with anxiety, the final outcome of the experiment which Mr. O'Neill, partly through stubbornness and partly through an honest conviction that his "Chillun" play is worth doing, has personally forced an issue.

There is an amusing story floating about Broadway which aims to explain why Robeson and not Charles Gilpin has been playing the name part in "The Emperor Jones" the last two weeks. Gilpin, you will remember, created the part and won national fame for himself and great praise for revealing the native dramatic talent of his race.

His success did not spoil Gilpin, as the story runs, but he is one who believes in making the most of prosperity when luck is running his way, and he lived well during his connec-

Taking a Look Back Through the Season

By Frederick Donaghey.

A TRADITION with little save space-filling to recommend it is that at this time of year something should be said about the plays of the season drawing to a letdown, if not to an end. The editor takes it on himself to list the six (or the ten) best plays without tunes, a like number of the best with tunes, and, then, to tell what were the "significant" exhibitions by the actors, and why, along with something weighty about "tendencies" in the new dramas, the revolutionary zeal (if any) of the new playwrights, and a summing-up of popular reactions toward the best. . . . Which is all right with me.

MISS GEORGIA O'RAMEY
She's the lady-clown of "No! No, Nanette!"
[White Photo.]

The trouble this Maytime, as in all the earlier Maytimes since I've been going to the theater, is that there haven't been six (or even ten) best plays with or without tunes; that none of the great deal of all kinds of acting has been significant of anything save the especial talent of the actors; there have been no tendencies in the new plays that were not in the old plays; that the zeal of the new playwrights has been all in the sane direction of ascertaining how to get a line of ticket-buyers into the lobby; and that the public has gone to see what it thought it might like, and, liking it, has gone to see it again. . . . In brief, the same kind of a season as any of the other seasons since Thespis passed the hat before starting his improving performances on the wagon-tail which was the dido-shelf of the drama in his Maytime.

What the Public Thought It Liked.

If all the persons who go to see plays in Chicago were to cast votes on it, the season's best would be "Abie's Irish Rose," without tunes, and "Topsy and Eva," with. There is no getting away from this as a statement of fact. After "Abie" would be listed "The Best People" or "The Old Soak," and then "The Fool," and then, perhaps, "Kiki." . . . Now, "Abie" is become the comic criterion of all that is at once inept and popular in the American theater. The entr'acte sophisticates on a first-night can always evoke a smoking-room laugh by saying: "Well, boys, don't forget that 'Abie' got over!" When a patrician player desires to express the nadir of scorn for the talents of another, he now calls him an "Abie-actor": the locution has taken that place in the mummers' catalogue of contumely that from the War of the Rebellion onward until two years ago was held by "He's a Tommer," meaning an actor fitted to perform only in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Yet, by any measure, "Abie's Irish Rose" is not the worst of the five tuneless plays mentioned earlier in this paragraph; nor is it the worst of the tuneless plays now on view in Chicago. I know that it is incredible as drama, inexplicable as entertainment, and all that; but, what of "The Fool"?

The Russians gave five new plays that were without interest for us save as they were media for the Russians' acting.

THE OUTLINE OF SCIENCE

EDITED BY Professor J. ARTHUR THOMSON

A PLAIN STORY SIMPLY TOLD . . . . . XXII.—THE ADVENTURERS

ALL through the millions of years during which animals have tenanted the earth and the waters under the earth there has been a search for new kingdoms to conquer, for new corners in which to make a home. And this still goes on. It has been and is one of the methods of evolution to fill every niche of opportunity. There is a spider that lives inside a pitcher plant, catching some of the inquisitive insects which slip down the treacherous internal surface of the trap. There is another that makes its home in crevices among the rocks on the shore of the Mediterranean, or even in empty tubular shells, keeping the water out, more or less successfully, by spinning threads of silk across the entrance to its retreat. The beautiful brine shrimp, Artemia salina, that used to occur in British salterns has found a home in the dense waters of the Great Salt lake of Utah. Several kinds of earthworms have been found up trees, and there is a fish, Arges, that climbs on the stones of steep mountain torrents of the Andes.

The intrepid explorers of the Scotia voyage found quite a number of arctic terns spending our winter within the summer of the antarctic circle—which means girdling the globe from pole to pole; and every now and then there are incursions of rare birds, like Pallas' sand grouse, into Britain, just as if they were prospecting in search of a promised land. Twice or thrice the distinctively North American killdeer plover has been found in Britain, having somehow or other got across the Atlantic. We miss part of the meaning of evolution if we do not catch this note of insurgence and adventure which some animal or other never ceases to sound, though many establish themselves in a security not easily disturbed and though a small minority give up the struggle against the stream and are content to acquiesce, as parasites or rottenness eaters, in a drifting life of ease.

More important than peculiar cases is the broad fact that over and over again in different groups of animals there have been attempts to master different kinds of haunts—such as the underground world, the trees, the freshwaters, and the air. There are burrowing amphibians, burrowing reptiles, burrowing birds, and burrowing mammals; there are tree toads, tree snakes, tree lizards, tree kangaroos, tree sloths, tree shrews, tree mice, tree porcupines, and so on: enough of a list to show, without mentioning birds, how many different kinds of animals have entered upon an arboreal apprenticeship—an apprenticeship which often with far reaching consequences. What the freeing of the hand from being an organ of terrestrial support has meant in the evolution of monkeys is a question that gives a spur to our imagination.

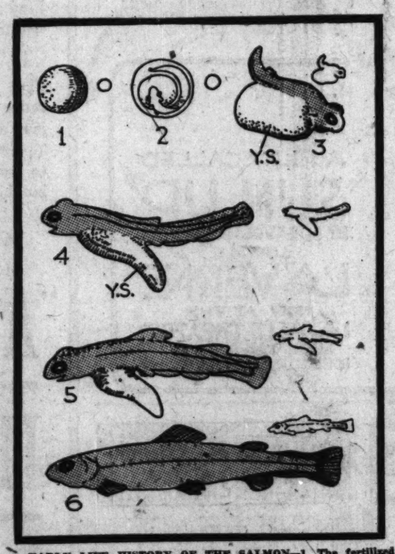
The Case of the Robber Crab.

ON some of the coral islands of the Indian and Pacific oceans there lives a land crab, Birgus, which has learned to breathe on land. It breathes dry air by means of curious blood containing tufts in the upper part of its gill cavity, and it has also rudimentary gills. It is often about a foot long, and it has heavy, great claws, especially on the left hand side. With this great claw it hammers on the eyehole of a cocoanut from which it has torn off the fibrous husk. It hammers until a hole is made by which it can get at the pulp. Part of the shell is sometimes used as a protection for the soft abdomen—for the robber crab, as it is called, is an offshoot from the hermit crab stock.

Every year this quaint explorer, which may go far up the hills and climb the cocoa palms, has to go back to the sea to spawn. The young ones are hatched in the same state as in our common shore crab. That is to say, they are free swimming larvæ which pass through an open water period before they settle down on the shore and eventually creep up on to dry land. Just as open water turtles lay their eggs on sandy shores, going back to their old terrestrial haunt, so the robber crab, which has almost conquered the dry land, has to return to the seashore to breed. There is a peculiar interest in the association of the robber crab with the cocoa palm, for that tree is not a native of these coral islands, but has been introduced, perhaps from Mexico, by the Polynesian mariners before the discovery of America by Columbus. So the learning to deal with cocoanuts is a recent achievement, and we are face to face with a good example of evolution going on.



EARLY LIFE HISTORY OF THE SALMON—1. The fertilized egg, shed in the gravelly bed of the river.
2. The embryo within the egg, just before hatching. The embryo has been constricted off from the yolk-laden portion of the egg.
3. The newly hatched salmon, or alevin, incumbered with its legacy of yolk (Y.S.).
4 and 5. The larval salmon, still being nourished from the yolk sac (Y.S.), which is diminishing in size as the fish grows larger.
6. The salmon fry about six weeks old, with the yolk fully absorbed, so that the young fish has now to feed for itself. The fry become parr, which go to the sea as smolts, and return as grilse.
In all cases the small figures to the right indicate the natural size.

The Story of the Salmon.

IN late autumn or in winter the salmon spawn in the rivers. The female makes a shallow trough in the gravel by moving her tail from side to side, and therein lays many eggs. The male, who is in attendance, fertilizes these with the milt, and then the female covers them deeply with gravel. The process is repeated over and over again for a week or more till all the eggs are shed. For three to four months the eggs develop, and eventually there emerge the larvæ, or alevins, which lurk among the pebbles. They cannot swim much, for they are incumbered by a big legacy of yolk. In a few weeks, perhaps eight, the protruding bag of yolk has disappeared, and the fry, about an inch long, begin to move about more actively and to fend for themselves. By the end of the year they have grown to be rather trout-like parr, about four inches long. In two years these are double that length. Usually in the second year, but it may be earlier or later, the parr become silvery smolts, which go out to sea, usually about the month of May. They feed on young herring and the like and grow large and strong. When they are about three and a half years old they come up the rivers as grilse and may spawn. Or they may pass through the whole grilse stage in the sea and come up the rivers with all the characters of the full grown fish. In many cases the salmon spawn only once, and some (they are called kelts after spawning) are so much exhausted by starting a new generation that they die or fall a victim to otters and other enemies. In the case of the salmon of the north Pacific (in the genus Oncorhynchus, not Salmo) all the individuals die after spawning, none being able to return to the sea. It must be remembered that full grown salmon do not, as a rule, feed in fresh water, though they may be unable to resist snapping at the angler's strange creations. An interesting fact is that the salmon keeps, as it were, a diary of its movements, which vary a good deal in different rivers. This diary is written in the scales, and a careful reading of the concentric lines on the scales shows the age of the fish, and when it went out to sea, and whether it has spawned or not, and more besides.

Interpretation of the Salmon's Story.

WHEN an animal frequents two different haunts, in one of which it breeds, it is often safe to say that the breeding place represents the original home. The flounder is quite comfortable far up the rivers, but it has to go to the shore waters to spawn, and there is no doubt that the flounder is a marine fish which has recently learned to colonize the fresh waters. Its relatives, like plaice and sole, are strictly marine. But it is impossible to make a dogma of the rule that the breeding place corresponds to the original home. Thus some kinds of bass, which belong to the marine family of sea perches, live in the sea or in estuaries, while two have become permanent residents in fresh water. Or, again, the members of the herring family are distinctively marine, but the shad, which belong to this family, spawn in rivers and may spend their lives there.

So there are two different ways of interpreting the life history of the salmon. Some authorities regard the salmon as a marine fish which is establishing itself in fresh water. But others read the story the other way and regard the salmon as a member of a fresh water race that has taken to the sea for feeding purposes. In regard to trout, we know that the ranks of those in rivers and lakes are continually being reinforced by migrants from the sea and that some trout go down to the sea while others remain in the fresh water. We know also in regard to a related fish, the char,

THE AUSTRALIAN FRILLED LIZARD, WHICH IS AT PRESENT TRYING TO BECOME A BIPED—When it gets up on its hind legs and runs for a short distance it folds its big collar around its neck.

DIAGRAM OF THE LIFE HISTORY OF THE COMMON EEL (Anguilla Vulgaris)—1. The transparent open sea knife-bladelike larva called a Leptocephalus.
2 and 3. The gradual change of shape from knife-bladelike to cylindrical. The body becomes shorter and loses weight.
4. The young elver, at least a year old, which makes its way from the open sea to the estuaries and rivers. It is two-thirds of an inch long and almost cylindrical.
5. The fully formed eel.

that while the great majority of kinds are now permanent residents in cold and deep, isolated northern lakes, there are arctic forms which live in the sea but enter the rivers to spawn. These facts favor the view that the salmon was originally a marine fish. But there are arguments on both sides, and, for our present purpose, the important fact is that the salmon is conquering two haunts. Its evolution is going on.

Early last summer, at dates varying with the distance of the rivers from the open Atlantic, crowds of young eels, or elvers, come upstream. Sometimes the procession, or eel fare, includes thousands of individuals, each about the length of our first finger and as thick as a stout knitting needle. They obey an inborn impulse to swim against the stream, seeking automatically to have both sides of their body equally stimulated by the current. So they go straight ahead. The obligation works only during the day, for when the sun goes down behind the hills the elvers snuggle under stones or beneath the bank and rest till dawn. In the course of time they reach the quiet upper reaches of the river or go up rivulets and drain pipes to the isolated ponds. Their impulse to go on must be imperious, for they may wriggle up the wet moss by the side of a waterfall or even make a short excursion in a damp meadow.

In the quiet flowing stretches of the river or in the ponds they feed and grow for years and years. They account for a good many young fishes. Eventually, after five or six years in the case of the males, six to eight years in the case of the females, the well grown fishes, perhaps a foot and a half to two feet long, are seized by a novel restlessness. They are beginning to be mature. They put on a silvery jacket and become large of eye, and they return to the sea. In getting away from the pond it may be necessary to wriggle through the damp meadow grass before reaching the river. They travel by night and rather excitedly. The Arctic ocean is too cold for them and the North sea too shallow. They must go far out to sea, to where the old margin of the once larger continent of Europe slopes down to the great abysses, from the Hebrides southwards.

Eels seem to spawn in the deep, dark water; but the just liberated eggs have not yet been found. The young fry rises to near the surface and becomes a knife blade like larva, transparent all but its eye. It lives for many months in this state, growing to be about three inches long, rising and sinking in the water, and swimming gently. These open sea young eels are known as leptocephali, a name given to them before their real nature was proved. They gradually become shorter, and the shape changes from knife blade like to cylindrical. During this change they fast, and the weight of their delicate body decreases. They turn into glass eels, about two and one-half inches long, like a knitting needle in girth. They begin to move towards the distant shores and rivers, and they may be a year and a half old before they reach their destination and go upstream as elvers. Those that ascend the rivers of the eastern Baltic must have journeyed three thousand miles. It is certain that no eel ever matures or spawns in fresh water. It is practically certain that all the young eels ascending the rivers of north Europe have come in from the Atlantic, some of them perhaps from the Azores or further out still.

It is interesting to inquire how the young eels circumvent the falls of the Rhine and get into Lake Constance, or how their kindred on the other side of the Atlantic overcome the obstacle of Niagara; but it is more important to lay emphasis on the variety of habitats which this fish is trying—the deep waters, the open sea, the shore, the river, the pond, and even, it may be, a little taste of solid earth. It seems highly probable that the common eel is a deep water marine fish which has learned to colonize the fresh waters. It has been adventurous and it has succeeded. The only shadow on the story of achievement is that there seems to be no return from the spawning. There is little doubt that death is the nemesis of their reproduction. In any case, no adult eel ever comes back from the deep sea. We are minded of Goethe's hard saying: "Death is nature's expert advice to get plenty of life."

Forming New Habits.

THERE is a well known mudfish of Australia, neoceratodus by name, which has turned its swim bladder into a lung, and comes to the surface to spout. It expels vitiated air with considerable force, and takes fresh gulps. At the same time, like an ordinary fish, it has gills which allow the usual interchange of gases between the blood and the water. Now this Australian mudfish or double breather (dipnoan), which may be a long way over a yard in length, is a direct and little changed descendant of an ancient extinct fish, ceratodus, which lived in Mesozoic times, as far back as the Jurassic, which probably means over five millions of years ago. The Queensland mudfish is an antiquity, and there has not been much change in its lineage for millions of years. We might take it as an illustration of the inertia of evolution. And yet, though its structure has changed but little, the fish probably illustrates evolution in process, for it is a fish that is learning to breathe dry air. It cannot leave the water; but it can live comfortably in pools which are foul with decomposing animal and vegetable matter. In partially dried up and foul water holes, full of dead fishes of various kinds, neoceratodus has been found vigorous and lively. Unless we take the view, which is possible, that the swim bladder of fishes was originally a lung, the mudfishes are learning to breathe dry air. They illustrate evolution a-going.

The herring gull is by nature a fish eater, but of recent years, in some parts of Britain, it has been becoming in the summer months more and more of a vegetarian, scooping out the turnips, devouring potatoes, settling on the sheaves in the harvest field and gorging itself with grain. Similar experiments, usually less striking, are known in many birds; but the most signal illustration is that of the kea or nestor parrot of New Zealand, which has taken to lighting on the loins of the sheep, tearing away the fleece, cutting at the skin, and gouging out fat. Now the parrot belongs to a vegetarian or frugivorous stock, and this change of diet in the relatively short time since sheep ranches were estab-

Mr. Rupert Hughes to D. W. Griffith:

Dear Mr. Griffith:

Your picture "AMERICA" has shaken me up and stirred me so deeply in so many ways that I must express my profound homage.

You have combined so many arts so greatly that your generalship is as amazing as your infinite success with detail of every sort.

There were so many thrills, heartbreaks and triumphs that it is ridiculous to praise any one thing.

But the whole sequence in which the son is brought to the bedside of the wounded father by that divine deceiver, the daughter, overwhelmed me as one of the greatest achievements by any of the arts from the Greek tragedy on.

The extraordinary tangled skein of Miss Dempster's acting, with every thread sincere and distinct and unlike anybody's else, also quite conquered me.

Things of the Theater, and the Persons Thereof

. . . Duse gave a single novelty, "The Closed Door," that was without interest even with her acting in it without interest even for her acting. . . . To me, the most interesting plays of the season were exhumations—"Œdipus Rex" and "Peer Gynt," and both were interesting for their effect as drama, and without regard to the unimportant acting of which they were the subject. "Secrets," "Laugh, Clown!—Laugh!" and "Kiki" were so many stunts for the players. . . . "The Changelings," which was brought here to an accompaniment of Manhattan's buzzahs, was nothing to bear in mind; and Mr. Zangwill, from whom something of importance is always expected and never obtained, turned out a vulgar, stupid piece in "We Moderns." . . .

What else was there? . . . Mrs. Fiske's play and Miss Barrymore's were shopware, like third-grade black silk or the kind of a collar you buy in an emergency at the railway-station haberdasher's. So, in kind, was "The Best People," which was gagged and wise-lined into a success. . . . Yes: there was "Spring Cleaning," which was pretty-nice dirt made attractive in terms of the theater. . . . "Sancho Panza" contained brains and piquant fancy, with its best qualities buried under the paraphernalia that made of it a good show. . . . And there is "Sun-Up," which is worth an evening when you are not bent on girls, tunes, and the laughs.

Eteatery.

There were other things, of course,—ephemera which may be grouped as good shows: pieces like "You and I," and "Merton," and one or two others, if they come to mind. And some that were regrettable misses, like "The Deep-Tangled Wildwood," which the authors couldn't get into play-form. And some awful messes. . . . Of the plays with tunes, "The Rise of Rosie O'Reilly" was easily the best, although, like you, I should be in trouble if I undertook to tell who was in it. None of the miscalled revues clicked: they were shy in fun and in ideas. If you regard the Chauve-Souris as one of them, an exception may be noted.

As to the actors, they were the actors, doing as well as they could what they were engaged to do, and none of them doing anything astonishing. If one exhibition more than any other was impressive, it was Leonidoff's in "The Brothers Karamazoff"; and the literate Russians with whom I have talked about it tell me that Katchaloff's in the same play was better. . . . Which is that for this Maytime.

The Colonial.

Chicago loses a handsome and a spacious and a comfortable theater as the Colonial is handed over to the wreckers. It will be missed for many reasons, and most for its especial qualities as a place to perform and to witness the more populous and spectacular of the musical shows. And with it goes the last of the fine and inviting foyers: the men who build theaters no longer bother with foyers and lobbies and places on the main level where a fellow can meet and talk with somebody else and not be in the way of everybody else. . . . The theater, of course, had its mean and tragic memories for Chicago: by many, it will always be spoken of as the Iroquois. And, with December of 1903 in mind, I'm wondering how many of you find something of a grim coincidence in the theater's closing last night and Eddie Foy's coming today to perform in a treadmill variety-show. For, if I rightly recall what I read and what I was told, the veteran clown was one of the heroes in that frightful December afternoon.

ON HER TOE TIPS SHE DANCES

MISS ULA SHARON
[Hesser Photo.]

SHE is catalogued as the First Dancer in the Greenwich Village Follies, which was an Autumn offering in the Apollo. Save that she was with it then, and that she sustained in the engagement injuries which took her off her toes for a time, not so much is known hereabout as to Miss Sharon; but it seems that she is on tour for the first time since achieving what is said to be fame in New-York, and that down there she was in earlier editions of the annual. . . . Yes; and it is recalled that she was well worth looking at in the Autumn.

THIS-AND-THAT

Both troupes of visiting Russians went away yesterday on the Majestic, leaving behind only Miss Alla Tarasova, who, as THE TRIBUNE told last week, is to alternate with Lady Diana Manners and Miss Rosamond Pinchot as the Nun in "The Miracle."

Mrs. Tchekhova, saying farewell for the Moscow Art Theater, hinted at a return, although it is doubtful if she and her associates would find it worth while to return. Balieff more than hinted that he will bring back the Chauve-Souris soon, although to do so doesn't seem the part of mercantile wisdom. . . . It is said that the Chauve-Souris netted $125,000 profit this season; and this is not incredible, although Chicago was none too hospitable, and they registered the Winter's most devastating frost in Kansas City.

The final appearance in New-York of the Moscow Art Theater was in what the Italianas call a gala; and the miscellaneous bill included the rowdy skit on dentistry, named "Surgery," which was in the second Chicago program of the Chauve-Souris. The skit is credited to Tchekhoff, whom the Moscow actors have virtually canonized.

Mention has been made in this department of THE TRIBUNE of a play called "Schemers" in which the villains are drama-critics. George S. Kaufman of the New-York Times, learns that there are four of 'em, and that their respective names in the play are A. Wood Brown, James Corbett, Alexander Olcott, and Alan Gale: the pseudonyms being a palpable disguise for Burns Mantle, J. Rankin Towse, Kenneth McGowan, and Robert Benchley. . . . The plot has to do with a producer who, blaming the critics for the ruin of two or three plays, entraps them into endorsing the scheme of a new one without letting them know that the idea is to be used on the stage. . . . Shaw, in "Fanny's First Play," used a number of the London drama-critics as comic characters under names nearly as subtle as those in "Schemers."

Channing Pollock's "The Enemy," announced for the Autumn, is said to have but one masculine character, and that one made to serve as a sort of Greek chorus or as what the French call the compère in their revues. . . . The theme of the play is war from the standpoint of women.

Jacob Ben-Ami, whom the New-York critics call an important actor; Lionel Atwill, whom the managers insist on starring, and Marian Green, a baritone who fared forth from the Chicago ateliers to make a London success in the operetta based on Tarkington's "Beaucaire," are going into the two-a-day. . . . Ben-Ami has been in a string of failures since he acted in Chicago three years ago with Miss Pauline Lord in a shindig called "Samson and Delilah"; Atwill is playing in "The Outsider," a fair success in New-York; and Green has been doing nothing much since "Beaucaire."

Owen Davis, who never quits, is to have his "Lazybones" acted tomorrow night in Atlantic City. . . . The title of his other new one, "Find the Woman!" has been changed to "The Long Arm of Coincidence." It is said to be a guying of the mystery-pieces.

Miss Lorraine Carrol has been put into the title-rôle of "Abie's Irish Rose" in the Studebaker; and Miss Martha Kretz, who has been playing it for some time, has been sent to the New-York company.

Drama-Critic Joins the Union.

Heywood Broun, whose New-York début as an actor is to be made Wednesday night in a revue called "Round the Town," has joined the Actor's Equity Association. . . . Regardless of the outcome of his début, he is to quit being the drama-critic of the New-York World, making way on that paper for Alexander Woollcott, also an actor by avocation.

When Mr. Broun took part in the Newark (N.J.) tryout of "Round the Town," last week, Mr. Benchley, critic of drama for Life, ran over to help him out, and gave a monologue which the Newark public and press said was indecent. . . . He has been one of the successful performers in this season's Music-Box Revue.

And this season's Music-Box Revue was taken off last night in New-York, after thirty-five weeks at the five-fifty scale of prices. . . . Sam Bernard, Clark and McCullough [who were in last season's, which was given in Chicago in the Autumn], Charles Purcell, George Jessell [who was in the last Passing Show in the Apollo], and Miss Grace Moore have been engaged for next season's, which will be the fourth in the series. Irving Berlin will again be the author-composer.

Miss Lee White, who was a non-celebrity of the American variety-theaters, has tried her hand at London management, and is said to be out $75,000 after a week or two with a revue called "Come In!" . . . She and her husband have been popular there for some years as performers in other persons' revues. He, too, was a minor person in the two-a-day here: his name is Clay Smith.

Miss Jetta Goudal, actress of the unashamed Madeleine in "Simon Called Peter," is going into the movies; and the management avers that the part will be given to a native daughter whose qualifications shall be in excess of those of any other native daughter who may apply for it.

Walter Hampden says Othello will be his next rôle, and that he will give "Cyrano de Bergerac" on tour next season. . . . His run in the play has been among the phenomena of the season in New-York.

New plays from abroad announced for the Autumn by the Frohman management [Gilbert Miller] are a comedy by Schnitzler which is yet to be shown in his beloved Vienna; one by Vajda, author of "Grounds for Divorce," called "The High-C"; and one by Molnar, author of "Liliom" and "The Swan," called "The Roman Feast."

Miss Eleanor Painter's vehicle, "The Chiffon Girl," is in the discard, after some weeks devoted to frying to make New-York like it. . . . "The Tantrum," which has been tried out with Miss Roberta Arnold and Will Deming in it, is to be put away until the Autumn.

Gémier, of fame in Paris as a producer, is to try his luck in New-York. . . . "Pigs" is the name of a comedy by Miss Anne Morrison, an actress with some experience in writing plays, and Patterson McNutt, a newspaperman who desires such experience.

Teapot Dome has achieved the drama, via one of the rowdy burlesque shows. . . . Victor Herbert, Raymond Hubbell, and Harry Tierney are named to do the music for the Ziegfeld Follies of 1924, to be staged next month.

This "Round the Town" piece is not to be given afternoons; but midnight performances Thursday and Saturday will take the place of matinées. . . . A good idea—for New-York.

Jack Hazzard, regarded as a comic fellow by many theater-goers, is to be in "Bo-Peep," which is a new thing with tunes. . . . The author of "The Cat and the Canary," a prosperous mystery-piece, says he is ready with another in kind.

Struthers and Katherine Burt have written "Silver Apples," which has been accepted by the management which calls itself the Dramatists' Theater. . . . Struthers Burt's "The Interpreter's House" is among the new novels.

"Exiles" is something new by Arthur Richman, who wrote "The Awful Truth," Miss Ina Claire's piece of last season.

tion with the play. Maybe too well, maybe not.

And frequently, when he was feeling particularly fit, he would interpolate a sentiment or two of his own in his reading of the O'Neill lines. Not with any intention of doing injury to the play, or any idea of being disrespectful to his author or his audience, but rather with the idea that a bit of native humor here and there was helpful.

One night Mr. O'Neill happened to be standing in the back of the theater when Charles came to a favorite line. It occurs in the scene in which the hounded emperor, determined to elude his imaginary pursuers, calls feelingly upon all his resources.

"Feet," he cries, "do yo' duty!"

Reaching that line, Gilpin never hesitated. But what Author O'Neill heard him cry was:

"Feet, yo' ain't goin' t' block traffic aroun' heah no mo'!"

Which, as I say, is one reason Robeson and not Gilpin has been playing the part in the revival.

"Catskill Dutch."

Another Harvard playwright has scored at least a half success with a native drama called "Catskill Dutch." It was among the plays submitted the season the prize went to Phillip Barry for his "You and I," and Richard Herndon, the producer, thought so well of it that he finally brought it to production.

The author is Roscoe W. Brink, a descendant of the Dutch settlers who spread north from New Amsterdam to the eastern side of the Catskill mountains in the sixteen hundreds. According to Mr. Brink, many of the old Dutch customs and practically all their religious rites and superstitions were flourishing as late as fifty years ago.

His story is of the bound girl, Neelia-Ann, working for the Elder Wollebens and being sparked by young Peetcha Steenkoop. While Peetcha is away, saving enough to get married on, Elder Wolleben tempts Neelia-Ann into sin and then denies her before the church committee.

Neelia-Ann can't tell, and the committee, knowing about Peetcha, decides he is really the guilty boy and insists that he shall make the girl honest and acknowledge the parentage of her two weeks old son.

Peetcha is pretty mad about it, but he agrees on condition that Neelia-Ann shall never tell the real truth. And so they are married. Six years later the wife of Elder Wolleben, herself childless and bitter and a little jealous of the fine happy family Peetcha and Neelia-Ann are raising, induces Neelia-Ann to organize a "persuasion" meeting in her own home in an effort to lure Peetcha back into the church. He has not been much for religion since he married.

Strange, These Dutch.

The meeting takes place. It is an exciting meeting and so intensely does it affect Neelia-Ann that she up and confesses her great sin, naming Elder Wolleben right there before God and all the assembled neighbors as the father of her first-born.

Peetcha, his pride hurt, his honor wounded, his faith in his woman, who has broken her word to him, gone, refuses to have anything more to do with poor Neelia-Ann, though there is an intimation that he is weakening a bit at the close.

"Catskill Dutch" is quaintly interesting as entertainment, but gets fairly dull before it is finished. It is thick with a twisted speech and thinned as drama by sacrificing everything to a literally truthful picture of the times. These are a strange people, these early Dutch settlers, and their country a strange country. So Broadway has not been noticeably excited by them.

The playing and settings are excellent. Frank McGlynn, the "Lincoln" man, has a sympathetic role. Minnie Dupree is fine as the bitter and rebellious lady Wolleben. Ann Davis plays Nelia-Ann sympathetically, and serious young Kenneth MacKenna does nicely by Peetcha.

"Hell Bent" Wins.

Of course there will be a lot of folks disappointed because the Pulitzer judges gave the $1,000 prize for the year's best American play to Hatcher Hughes' "Hell-Bent fer Heaven." But I am not one of them. It is a good play, and, though it has not proved as popular as its promoters had reason to expect it would, it fairly represents the season's best of any of them.

Prof. Hughes, the author, teaches drama at Columbia. In January, when "Hell-Bent" was produced by the Klaws, there was no theater available for it. The play was started at a series of special matinées, and with not much help or attention from the reviewers. It gained steadily in favor and within a month was creating considerable excitement.

A few weeks later it was transferred to the Frazee theater for a run and has been there ever since, never doing a big business, but enough to keep above the failure line. Last week—the Saturday before it won the prize, incidentally—it closed at the Frazee and took to the subway circuit, playing Brooklyn this week.

It is the best written of the folk dramas, dealing with the mountain people of the south, which have followed the production of "Sun Up" a year ago. The story is of a forgotten feud between the Hunts and the Lowerys that is fanned to revival by the devilish innuendos of a religious fanatic—the most gorgeous villain born of the theater since Iago made a fool of the Moor.

It is the second play Prof. Hughes has offered Broadway. In 1920 he wrote, with Elmer Rice, a piece called "Wake Up, Jonathan," which Mrs. Fiske played and which proved vastly entertaining to her comparatively limited but rather choosy public.

Among other American plays that were considered by the committee, I have heard, were Lee Wilson Dodd's "The Changelings," Zona Gale's "Mr. Pitt," George Kelly's "The Show Off," Rachel Crothers' "Expressing Willie," and Lewis Beach's "The Goose Hangs High."

Peg Put to Music.

"Peg o' My Dreams," as you know, is the original "Peg" with a musical score attached.

You know what that means. Whenever a guest calls on the Chichesters he stops long enough to do a song and dance, while the butler holds his hat and cane and probably helps with the chorus. And all the girls and boys rehearsing for the hunt ball do it in the Chichester drawing room.

They had a time finding a singing comedienne for the Laurette Taylor part. The choice finally fell to a young lady named Suzanne Keener. She comes, I believe, from Pittsburgh. This is her first part, so she is not much of an actress. And this is her first real experience as a prima donna near Broadway, so she is not singing confidently. But otherwise she does very well. Her red wig is becoming, she has a certain youthful charm, and Peg, carrying the sympathy she does, isn't really a hard part to play.

Fortunately for Richard Herndon, who has spent a lot of money on the production, G. P. Huntley, playing the fool Alaric, gets a fine lot of comedy out of the rôle and keeps the piece moving.

Roy Royston, a new fair faced juvenile from England, plays Jerry rather engagingly; Roberta Beatty, who used to sing in church choirs, is the snippy Ethel, and there is a little dancer named Albertina Vitak you are going to hear a lot about the next few years.

MISS ESTHER HOWARD

She is held to be a Chicago find because she won attention in "The Sweetheart-Shop," something frivolous of four years ago, before it was shown in other cities. She returned later with Bert Williams, acting with him through what proved to be his final Chicago engagement, in "Under the Bamboo-Tree," in the Studebaker. She's now in "Wildflower," wherein she is as funny as the libretto permits, and is a riot with one song, "The World's Worst Woman."

Stage-News

Eddie Cantor, whose vehicle of "Kid Boots" is said to be among the things to see and hear in New-York, says he will produce plays next season, and names "The Bulldog" as one. . . . Miss Raquel Meller, the Spanish disease whom illness kept from coming over last Autumn, says she will come next season.

Charles Rann Kennedy, who wrote "The Servant in the House" and has never gotten over it, is at it again. His latest is "The Admiral," which has to do with Columbus; and he and Edith Wynne Matthison [Mrs. Kennedy] are performing in it.

"The Blue Hawaiian" is a melodrama imported from Germany, with the title referring to a rare postage-stamp.

The Lambs, oldest of the actors' clubs, will celebrate their fiftieth anniversary next month with a special gambol. . . . The London managers, as a body, say they'll do anything they may to help out in case the American actors strike June 1.

It is said that $30,000 has been paid for the film-rights in "The Goose Hangs High," in which Norman Trevor is acting in Manhattan. . . . Trevor's promised revival there of Wilde's "An Ideal Husband" was for one night only, for a charity.

Nelson Keys, the London comedian, is said to have endangered his American chances by giving hospitality to an attack of nerves at his New-York opening in André Charlot's Revue.

New Playbills

OPENING TONIGHT:

The Greenwich Village Follies [Garrick]: Return-engagement for a fortnight of the fourth edition of the annual, shown in the Autumn of last year in the Apollo. The reason for the return is that the "team" of Gallagher and Shean has been added to the roster, and will appear for the first time in two years in Chicago. Miss Ula Sharon, Carl Randall, and others who were with it before are still with it.

OPENING JUNE 1:

Miss Alys Delysia in "Artists and Models" [Apollo]: A show in the form of a revue which will represent a blend of Miss Delysia's contributions to Topics of 1923, not known in Chicago, and the salient features of an entertainment called "Artists and Models" which has been among the talked-about things of the season in the New-York theaters. Bard and Pearl, Harry Kelly, and many another is named to assist the lady.

That "Simon Called Peter" will be moved from the Great Northern to the Princess at the end of the week is known. Also that Miss Edith Day in "Wildflower" will be transferred to the Garrick on June 1. But there is nothing definite as to the dates for numerous shows named as incoming. . . . One is "On the Stairs," a melodrama by William Hurlbut which James Crane is rehearsing. . . . Another is "Hell-Bent for Heaven," the play which took this season's Pulitzer prize as the best of the native dramas shown in New-York, where it had a run of fourteen weeks. Mr. Bryant desires it for the Playhouse when "Easy Street" shall have run its course; and its producer hesitates to give a reply lest the actors' union upset his plans. . . .

A Negro entertainment, with Miss Florence Mills as the star, is said to be due in the Apollo after Delysia. . . . There is reason to think that something will be sent on to Cohan's Grand after "The Horse-Thief" is through in that theater. . . . Mr. Herrmann doesn't expect "The Climax" to remain all Summer in the Cort, but says nothing as to what will be next. . . . The Misses Duncan expect to stick till August in the Selwyn; and "No! No, Nanette!" and "Sun-Up" are on the mend, as to attendance, in the Harris and the La Salle, respectively.

day night—and beat a lot of moving peiture celebrities who have been dancing every night for years.

When the contest was announced he simply grabbed Mlle. Dorothy, the Ambassador's pet dancer, and started heaving his shoulders in time to the syncopation of his feet—if not in time to the jazz dance music of the band.

Mlle. Dorothy, who is a second Mrs. Castle—the discovery of John Barton Browne—fell readily into Jolson's [illegible] thousand diners went wild.

The Chevalier du Brac, who taught King Alfonso how to do the tango—and the bunnyhug for all I know—danced with Mildred Harris. But he didn't have a chance against Jolson. Neither did Carmel Myers, Betty Francisco, Elaine Hammerstein, Alexander Carr, nor their partners.

The judges were Fatty Roscoe Arbuckle, Henry Santrey, and Jack Wilson. It is to be recorded that this is Fatty's first experience at being a judge.

Miss Harris was dressed in a white satin evening gown splashed with rhinestones; Miss Myers was in Lanvin green; Miss Hammerstein in flame chiffon.

Wallace MacDonald and Doris May celebrated their third wedding anniversary—which is a rare event in Hollywood society.

Mrs. MacDonald recently announced her intention of leaving the screen forever. There's a reason. You will know some time this summer. Of course, a mother should devote her career to her child, Mrs. MacDonald says, or to her children.

Betty Compson has signed a contract with Famous Players-Lasky. Betty's career reminds one of "what every extra girl ought to know"—or something like that.

Betty was a Christie comedy gal. George Loane Tucker saw her and made her Rose in "The Miracle Man." Fame was hers, followed by a few star pictures. She was engaged to Tucker. Tucker died—and Betty was what is technically known as "a flop."

When she went away she was presumably engaged to Walter Morosco. When she came back Walter had married Corinne Griffith.

Then she met an old friend, Jim Cruze. An engagement announcement followed. Betty was rehired by Lasky to work in a Cruze picture. And there you are.

Will Rogers is going east to star in the "Follies." And he's taking "the missus." Will was going alone, according to the first plan. Then he took Mrs. Will to Bill Hart's for dinner. And Hart got to talking about the "Follies" girls and stuff like that. So the first plan was abandoned.

VOICE OF THE MOVIE FAN

You Don't Say!

Dear Miss Tinée: Yes, Bushman is coming back. I do hope the producers hold a lens breaking contest between him, Hamilton Revelle, and Lou Tellegen—the three most conceited men in the cinema. I'll bet on Bushman. I saw him in screen snapshots the other night. He hasn't changed a bit. Overdoes everything—has no knowledge of the fitness of things; shows alleged happiness of present home; solid ivory.

The next time you are talking to Griffith, the alleged producer, ask him if he thinks he could make a successful picture without invoking the aid of patriotism and religion. You know what they say in the theatrical business? You can put anything over with them.

Your criticism a short time ago on Charles Mack is O. K. Instead of wasting your time, you should simply say he is one of Griffith's freaks, and they are all that. A. T. J.

[Editor's Note: Evidently the world's all wrong with you? Wassamatter?]

Did He Really?

Dear Mae Tinée: In your review of "Galloping Fish" I notice you have a good word for the seal. It reminds me of something which Abe Martin said several years ago. Abe said: "I was over to Hopeville last night tu see 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; the dogs was good, but they had pore support."

W. H. D.

Ask Me! Ask Me!

DOROTHY D.: Theres' a corner in the Sunday paper especially devoted to kicks, so come right along with your tale of woe. Why, of course, there are lots of things wrong with the movies—but the same holds true of any other industry. Chances are you're not half so "put out" as some of the producers are. Only thing to do is to buck up and carry along.

ENGLISH SOLDIER: I don't believe you. Soldiers don't write anonymous letters. Soldiers who WERE in the world war tell a far different story from yours. Go crawl into your corner.

R. F. C.: Thank you for your letter. It was my great pleasure.

PASQUALE: The information was culled from the latest directory printed. One assumes the publishers made careful inquiry before they printed it. The name you refer to is "misspelled" by request.

SUBSCRIBER: Nothing. Just keep asking.

J. D. M.: We'll have the pictures in the rotogravure section some time. Watch and wait! Thank you for what you s[illegible]u are.

HARRIET: Yes, I really did want your opinion. Your reasons are good ones. Thank you for taking the time and trouble to write. I agree with you.

WOMAN MOVIE FAN: Remember that when you hear things through a third person a quotation is apt to be sadly garbled. I am inclined to think the star to whom you refer merely made a courteous remark that was greatly misconstrued. You know only 50 per cent of any gossip is usually grounded on fact. Do I hear you say, "BUT O, THAT 50 PER CENT!" All right—so be it. But discount the rest for sweet charity's sake. Atta girl!

Alexander Kornhauser Company

608-610 MICHIGAN AVENUE, South BETWEEN HARRISON & 7TH

The comparatively few women whose good fortune it was to visit the Kornhauser Store on Michigan Avenue during the short time they were in business, found it quite the most artistically designed, the best planned, the most elaborately executed of any of Michigan Avenue's famous Specialty shops—but, better still, they found that the Merchandise they displayed was even more attractive, more strikingly beautiful, more expressive of the Fashions of note of the moment in Paris and New York than the fittings and surroundings. The coats, the suits, the gowns and dresses, the wraps, the millinery and the various accessories they carried in conjunction can certainly not be adequately described in this page of news, for they embody to the fullest degree every whim of Fashion; the styles, the colors, the weaves that are the vogue are represented, and in most instances in goodly numbers, and so this opportunity opens with the assurance of the attendance of the woman who knows styles, who knows what fashion is—you, too, madam, should plan to be here; you'll find this splendid stock, so rich and varied, marked at far lower prices than similar merchandise has been offered within the past year.

Sixth Floor—State Street

The Alexander Kornhauser Co. purchased their millinery in the same careful, particular manner that characterized all their buying, choosing only the very newest and most fashionable from the leading makers and importers in the East. You'll find beautiful hair hats trimmed with gorgeous flowers and feathers, Canton crepe hats, taffeta and satin hats trimmed with flowers, fancy birds and wings which are the latest vogue, Milan hats, Leghorn hats and any number of fancy straws that are in such favor for summer.

ART AND ARTISTS

"Porcelain Figurine" is a Copenhagen production of exquisite line and grace to be seen in the Applied Arts exhibition at the Art institute. This exhibit closes June 1.

Capital Galleries' Vast Collection of Things Beautiful

By Eleanor Jewett.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—[Special Correspondence.]—To go from Chicago to Baltimore is to go from a center still enjoying the full strength of its art interests to one that has already, before the hot breath of summer has yet stirred, put its treasures to bed in clean linen and camphor balls against the expected arrival of sultry days. The one thing in Baltimore quick with life is its method of handling street traffic. There are no through streets, the car coming from the right [though it be but out of an alley] has the right of way, and the result is pandemonium indescribable and an extravagant howling of horns at street intersections accompanied by a grinding of breaks and an occasional darting of cars around corners their drivers had had no intention of rounding.

Washington is different. The broad streets, for one thing, compel a more controlled traffic. In fact, so smoothly does the traffic run that it falls easily into its rightful place of uneventful importance and the matters that count mount above it to increasing points of interest. Public buildings, monuments, imposing bridges, residences of people of note, legations and embassies, parks, drives, and the new Academy of Science, galleries and various institutions of importance, these are the claimants for one's attention.

Through the medium of paintings and sculpture a fresh realization of the comparative smallness of the world, and this continent in particular, is borne in upon one. Painters whose pictures have been seen at the Chicago Art institute are found again here in the National gallery and the Corcoran Gallery of Art. Similarly with sculptors. The smaller galleries here, as in Chicago, lend themselves more easily to the promoting of new work, but for discovery of the established artist one goes to the established museum.

A special exhibition of oil paintings by a group of American artists is now arousing great interest in the Corcoran Gallery of Art. With an exception or two, the names of the painters ring familiarly in our ears. There are paintings by Gifford Beal, George Bellows, Arthur B. Davies, William J. Glackens, Robert Henri, Rockwell Kent, Leon Kroll, Ernest Lawson, Jerome Myers, Maurice B. Prendergast, and John Sloan, to mention but those with whom we are well acquainted.

The National Gallery is a vast treasure house of things curious and beautiful. Downstairs is a multitude of interesting matters—everything from fossils of extinct fish life to wonderfully mounted groups of wild beasts sent back by Theodore Roosevelt when he directed the Smithsonian expedition on a scientific hunting trip some years before his death, to a comprehensive collection of old masters and modern paintings and, upstairs, from rocks and precious stones to cases of mounted butterflies and tiny beetles, from a whale over seventy feet in length to a collection of pianos.

Even these starting and stopping points of enumeration do not hint at the full tale of wonders to be found in the gallery. There are cases of stuffed birds, cases of people illustrative of customs of living among the lower races—the Somali, the Icelander, the red skin before the white man drained his heart's blood, and various African and South sea island tribes.

Nor is this all. To continue, one might as well undertake the making of a catalog, a task uninteresting unless lightened by the knowledge of things seen. So, leaving the thought at its inception, we turn to the last notable addition to the National Gallery collections in the shape of a group of paintings by old masters, lately given into the museum's charge by Mrs. Ralph Cross Johnson of Washington.

Chiefly the group consists of works by the primitive schools of painting of Flanders and Italy, a few later works complete the group. Even these do not keep us long. We note a Ribera, "The Visit of the Wisemen," by Van Orley, "Virgin, Christ, and St. John" attributed to Albertinelli, "Christ in the Temple" by Tiepoli, a magnificent self-portrait by Lawrence, and a portrait of Prince Charles by Janssens Van Coulen.

An exhibition of work by Viennese school children, shown downstairs in the National museum under the joint auspices of the National Gallery of Art and the American Federation of Arts, is of peculiar interest. It is hard to realize the work is really that of children under sixteen years of age. According to the professor who instructs these children, after they reach fifteen years of age all but the really talented lose their power to draw through the curse of self-consciousness. This supposition offers a suggestive starting point for debate.

cipal singers of the Metropolitan Opera company had resigned. It looked startling, and continued to look so until further information disclosed not that they had resigned but that they had re-signed, a somewhat different matter.

This was part of a statement given out by Director Giulio Gatti-Casazza just before he departed on his annual trip to Europe. At that, there were several interesting points in his statement, not the least of which that the coloratura soprano from La Scala, Toti Dal Monte, was listed among his newcomers. She has also been announced for the Chicago company, and there is at present a lack of information as to whether she will divide her time between the two organizations or whether one or the other is mistaken.

Mr. Gatti adds that Jeritza, Galli-Curci, Alda, Ponselle, Claussen, Ruffo, Chaliapin, and all other recent favorites of the public will return. His other newcomers will be Nanny Larsen-Todsen soprano of the Stockholm opera; Maria Muller, soprano of the Munich opera; Joan Ruth, an American soprano heard with the Wagnerian company; Mary Bonetti, contralto, also an American; Ralph Errolle, tenor, formerly in light opera and once in the company, and Francesco Seri, an Italian basso.

He also lists as one of his conductors Tullio Serafin, who was talked about for a position here, but later changed plans. Another Metropolitan novelty, in addition to those printed a few weeks ago, is Stravinsky's delectable ballet, "Petroushka," which would be a great news item for Chicago if there were a possibility of seeing it here again. The artists of last season who will not return are Barbara Kemp, Suzanne Keener, Margaret Romaine, Flora Perini, Orville Harrold, Pietro Audisco, Renato Zanelli and Italo Picchi.

Opera at Home.

Mr. Insull's report to the guarantors of the Civic Opera company the other day also had its items of interest, those these dealt with the world of mathematics more than art. One point, not expressly stated, but deducible as a problem in division, was that the intake of the company on the road averaged better than when it was at home in the Auditorium.

The receipts for ninety-one performances at the Auditorium were $861,127.14; for sixty-one performances on tour, $649,388.72. This was not as great a total, but a better average, something like $9,462.93 for each performance at home—admitting that the division has been correct — and $10,645.71 abroad. The difference is explicable from the fact that the company has its tour performances sold for a guaranteed sum before it fills its outside engagements.

The loss for the season, as the Chicago guarantors have cause to know, is $326,759.25. Mr. Insull says it seems evident that even with the most careful management opera as presented by the company can be given in Chicago at the present time only at a loss, though he hopes to be able to cut some of the items of cost. The average intake during last season would seem to be in the neighborhood of two-thirds the total capacity of the Auditorium. If, therefore, all seats for all performances were sold at the present prices, the company could pay expenses and have a margin of profit of something like $100,000 on a season. This would be an ideal condition, hardly to be attained under present circumstances. It would mean, among other things, a répertoire of works of such a kind and given in such a way that no one could afford to stay away. At present musical events of that order do not classify as grand opera.

Galli-Curci, who will not be here next season, will close her year's work on June 5 with a concert in the Hollywood bowl near Los Angeles, at which time she will sing with the Los Angeles Symphony orchestra. It will be her first al fresco appearance, her first in this amphitheater, and the first time in five years she has appeared with a symphony orchestra. She promises to sing the Bell Song from "Lakme," "Caro Nome" from "Rigoletto," the Polonaise from "Mignon," and the Mad Scene from "Lucia di Lammermoor" in its entirety. They are all pieces which at one time and another she has juggled with astonishing dexterity on the stage of the Auditorium.

Here and There in Music.

A festival concert under the auspices of the Illinois chapter of the American Guild of Organists has been announced for Tuesday on the great organ of St. Luke's church, Evanston. The first concert under the guild auspices was given in Orchestra hall with the Chicago Symphony orchestra and was a notable demonstration of the organ as a concert instrument. The one next Tuesday is called "a public service," in which the artists will be assisted by St. Luke's vested choir. The artists are Wilhelm Middelschulte, formerly of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, organist of K. A. M. temple, Chicago; John W. Norton, organist and choirmaster of St. James Episcopal church, Chicago, and Herbert E. Hyde, organist and choirmaster of St. Luke's, Evanston.

Rhys Morgan, Welsh tenor, will give a song recital at the Blackstone theater this afternoon. He will sing two Handel arias, songs in German and French, an aria from Puccini's "Tosca," a group in Welsh, and another in English by Welsh composers.

With the presentation of "Aïda" today, Balaban & Katz will conclude the current season of popular Sunday noon symphony and opera concerts at the Chicago theater. It is planned to present organ recitals by Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Crawford during the summer months and in the fall resume the alternating concerts again, as in the season just finished.

During the last season six operas in English were offered in concert form, with a chorus of fifty and capable principals. The operas given were "Cavalleria," "Pagliacci," "Faust," "Il Trovatore," "Carmen," and "Aïda." In addition the symphonic poem, "The King and the Forest," by Ettore Panizza, was given its first presentation.

In today's performance Frieda Salger will sing the rôle of Aïda and Leah Pratt that of Amneris. Arthur Boardman will have the music of Radames, Louis Kreidler that of Amonasro, and Carl Bitterl that of the king. Fifty members of the Apollo Musical club will sing the choral parts and Nathaniel Finston will direct the performance.

The prize winners in the recent competition of Bush conservatory will be the soloists in the institution's symphony orchestra concert at Orchestra hall on Tuesday night. Richard Czerwonky will conduct. A feature of the program will be two works for orchestra by Robert L. Sanders, a 17 year old composer.

Claudia Muzio is in receipt of kind words from Le Figaro for her performance in the name part of "Aïda" at the Paris Opéra. It says she made one of the most telling successes of the season.

Listed among the musical events of the day is a program by the Belle Bender Russian ballet school at the Studebaker this afternoon, and another by Nick Cambourakis, a young violinist, at the Blackstone tonight.

Wallingford Riegger of New York is the winner in the annual chamber music competition of the Berkshire Music colony, and thereby takes the $1,000 prize offered by Mrs. F. S. Coolidge. His work is written for four voices and a chamber orchestra of seven instruments. It is a setting of Keats' poem, "La Belle Dame Sans Merci." Mr. Riegger is the first native American to win the Berkshire prize. Frederick Jacobi, another New Yorker, received honorable mention for "Two Assyrian Prayers," for soprano voice and chamber music. The jury consisted of Eric De Lamarter of Chicago, Carl Engel of Washington, Edward Burlingame Hill of Cambridge, Albert Stoessel of New York, and Augustus S. Vogt of Toronto. One hundred and six works were submitted from twelve different countries. The winning work will have its first public performance at the annual Berkshire festival this fall.

The Society for the Publication of American Music, also concerned with chamber music, sends word that it has selected David Stanley Smith's sonata for violin and piano and Albert Stoessel's sonata for two violins and piano for publication this year. The society will receive works, chamber music only, up to Oct. 15 for consideration in next year's publication list. Any composer may submit two works. William Burnet Tuthill, 185 Madison avenue, New York, is the secretary.

The United States section of the International Society for Contemporary Music has elected Emerson Whithorne its president; Frank Patterson, vice-president, and William Burnet Tuthill, secretary and treasurer.

The lovely Pavlowa has finished her tour and gone to England for what looks like a well deserved rest. While in this country she gave 250 performances in 100 cities, and danced from four to eight feature numbers in each without missing a performance. She will start again in September with performances in London and Paris, return to this country about the middle of October, give a two weeks' season in Chicago late in January, and possibly tour to Australia, which up to date is about the only country she has not visited.

IN OPERA AND CONCERT

MARGERY MAXWELL.
[Daguerre Photo.]

From opera to concert and back to opera according to the calendar is the season's routine of this decorative and artistic young soprano. She was a valued member of the Civic Opera company last winter; she is at present somewhere in America on concert assignments; she will take part in the operatic proceedings at Ravinia this summer.

DANCER

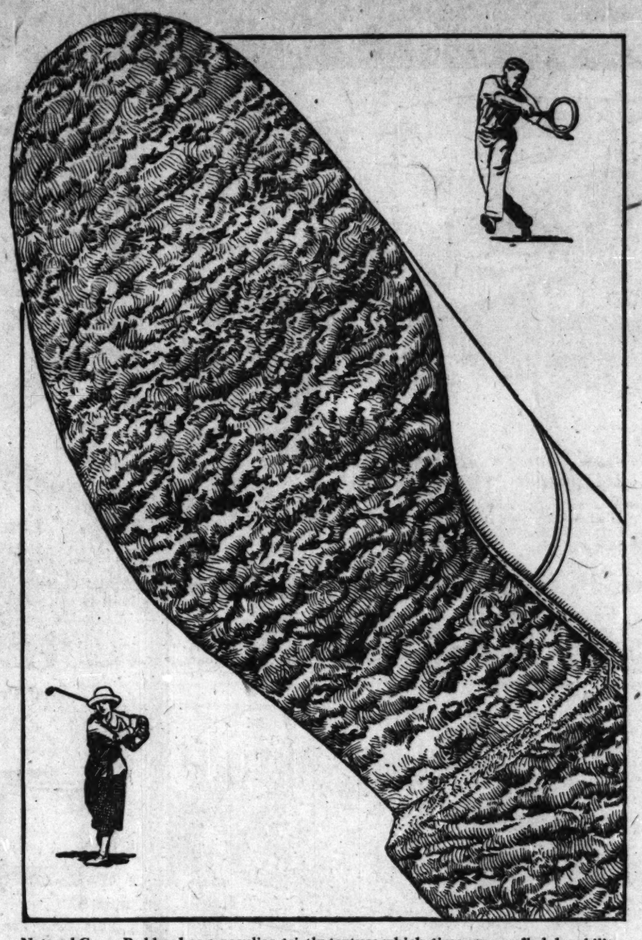
MISS EDITH McGARRY.

Pupils of the Belle Bender Russian Ballet school will appear in a recital at the Studebaker theater at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon. Miss Edith McGarry will assist in a Grecian ballet and also in another number of the program.

"The Immortal Sole"

Natural (Plantation Finished) Crepe Rubber

For Every Walking Purpose



Natural Crepe Rubber has a peculiar gristly texture which gives unequalled durability, making the most economical sole in existence. The combination of lightness, flexibility, resiliency and particularly the unprecedented durability has made Natural Crepe Rubber the sensation of the entire Boot and Shoe Industry.

Resilient: Flexible: Durable: Light: Non-Skidding: Ever-Wearing:

Natural Crepe Rubber is the answer to the sole question since men first wore shoes. The live pure rubber with all its natural rubber properties unimpaired has resiliency and impact absorbing qualities found in no other soleing material. For this reason it has become, in two years time (since its introduction) a most popular sole for both the sport shoes and general wear.

Natural (Plantation finished) Crepe Rubber is 100% pure rubber—nothing added, nothing taken away—with all the natural rubber properties unimpaired. It is the pure latex of the rubber tree, freshly milled immediately after coagulation. It is live, full of nerve, subjected to no treatment subsequent to milling which would impair its original qualities.

Ask your shoe dealer to show you genuine Crepe Rubber Soles—the apparent advantages of this new product will convince you—a test will most certainly prove its superiority.

lated in New Zealand is striking. Here since we know the dates, we may speak of evolution going on under our eyes. It must be remembered that variations in habit may give an animal a new opportunity to test variations in structure which arise mysteriously from within, as expressions of germinal changefulness rather than as imprints from without. For of the transmissibility of the latter there is little secure evidence.

Experiments in Locomotion.

It is interesting to think of the numerous types of locomotion which animals have discovered—pulling and punting, sculling and rowing, and the changes that are rung on these four main methods. How striking is the case of the frilled lizard [chamydosaurus] of Australia, which at the present time is, as it were, experimenting in bipedal progression—always a rather eventful thing to do. It gets up on its hind legs and runs totteringly for a few feet, just like a baby learning to walk.

How beautiful is the adventure which has led our dipper or water ouzel—a bird allied to the wrens—to try walking and flying under water! How admirable is the voiplaning of numerous parachutists—flying fish, flying frog, flying dragon, flying phalanger, flying squirrel, and more besides, which take great leaps through the air. For are these not the splendid failures that might have succeeded in starting new modes of flight?

Most daring of all, perhaps, are the aerial journeys undertaken by many small spiders. On a breezy morning, especially in the autumn, they mount on gateposts and palings and herbage, and, standing with their heads to the winds, pay out three or four long threads of silk. When the wind tugs at these threads, the spinners let go, and are borne, usually back downwards, on the wings of the wind from one parish to another. It is said that if the wind falls they can unfurl more silk, or furl it if it rises. In any case, these wingless creatures make aerial journeys. When tens of thousands of the used threads sink to earth there is a "shower of gossamer." On his Beagle voyage Darwin observed that vast numbers of small gossamer spiders were borne on to the ship when it was sixty miles distant from the land.

New Devices.

It is impossible, we must admit, to fix dates, except in a few cases, relatively recent; but there is a smack of modernity in some striking devices which we can observe in operation today. Thus no one will dispute the statement that spiders are thoroughly terrestrial animals breathing dry air, but we have the fact of the water spider conquering the underwater world. There are a few spiders about the seashore, and a few that can survive douching with fresh water, but the particular case of the true water spider, argyroneta natans, stands by itself because the creature, as regards the female at least, has conquered the subaquatic environment. A flattish web is woven, somehow, underneath the water, and pegged down by threads of silk.

Along the special vertical line the mother spider ascends to the surface and descends again, having entangled air in the hairs of her body. She brushes off this air underneath her web, which is thereby buoyed up into a sort of dome. She does this over and over again, never getting wet all the time, until the domed web has become like a diving bell, full of dry air. In this eloquent anticipation of man's rational device, this creature—far from being endowed with reason—lays her eggs and looks after her young. The general significance of the facts is that when competition is keen a new area of exploitation is a promised land. Thus spiders have spread over all the earth except the polar areas. But here is a spider with some spirit of adventure, which has endeavored, instead of trekking, to find a new corner near at home. It has tackled a problem surely difficult for a terrestrial animal, the problem of living in great part under water, and it has solved it in a manner at once effective and beautiful.

We have given but a few representative illustrations of a great theme. When we consider the changefulness of living creatures, the transformations of cultivated plants and domesticated animals, the gradual alterations in the fauna of a country, the search after new haunts, the forming of new habits, and the discovery of many inventions, are we not convinced that evolution is going on? And why should it stop?

AIR CLEAR OF INTERFERENCE IS FALL PROSPECT

Middle West Behind East in Fighting Evils.

BY STEPHEN GILCHRIST.
[Radio Editor.]

Events in the matter of interference are moving with such rapidity of late that it seems reasonable to expect a fairly clear air by fall. Chief among these are:

1. Opening of a vigorous campaign against all types of interference by the American Radio association, an organization rapidly becoming national in scope.
2. Congressional cognizance of the need of immediate steps of some kind to relieve the listening public of unnecessary noises and annoyances.
3. Preparations for the forthcoming conference to be called by Secretary Hoover which doubtless will deal with interference.
4. Sharpening of decrement by many hitherto careless radiocasts.
5. Amateur check on offenders in licensed ranks.

East More Active than West.

While Chicago is being looked to as the coming seat of radio activities, the east threatens to gobble up the laurels in the matter of prosecution of non-interference campaigns. Amateurs there have not only kept their own element in line, but have lent valuable assistance in running down offending radiating receivers and educating the owners in tuning or remodeling their squawkers, tracing induction sources, and generally giving a hand in making reception better. The American Radio association has climbed into the driver's seat with a vim that presages good conditions in the east before long, and owners of single circuit offenders seem diminishing rapidly in that section of the country.

Interference conditions in Chicago, with the exception of amateur offenses, have improved little. Induction and stray noises from various sources still clog the ether. And this is due solely to lack, so far, of any concerted efforts, beyond one or two purely neighborhood campaigns. And for the benefit of those who are inclined to a what's-the-use attitude, be it said that these same neighborhoods, notably those garrisoned by the Broadcast Listeners' association's forces, are having a mightily improved brand of reception.

Amateurs Start to Act.

Amateurs of Chicago have met and decided to better conditions, but, so far as the writer has been able to learn, have taken no active steps as yet, despite the fact that there are still, and will continue to be, thousands of radioans in the vicinity of Chicago who cannot distinguish between the staccato-like clicks of induction and buzzer or key.

For the benefit of organizations which may be inclined actively to participate in the fight against interferences of all types, there is printed in another column a story regarding the campaign of the American Radio association.

SEES SQUAWKER'S END

In connection with the destiny of radiating receivers, especially the single circuit, J. H. Morecroft, writing in Radio Broadcast for June, says, in part:

"There is now no doubt that the single circuit regenerative receiver is doomed to go. Dissatisfaction of the listening public has at last penetrated the high places, and we now hear Mr. Sarnoff of the Radio corporation tell a congressional committee ,that 'the Radio corporation recognized the problem of radiation and favored a law prohibiting the sale of receivers which produced audible interference with others in close proximity.' Within a period of two years he would make it unlawful for any one to use a radiating receiver!

"It is with great satisfaction that we see this company, many of whose sets constitute one of the greatest causes of interference, finally change its attitude on this question. It is, it seems likely, more satisfactory to us to think of this law prohibiting radiating receivers than it is to those hundreds of thousands who paid high prices to the Radio corporation for the single circuit regenerative receivers which it so ardently advocated a short time back. It seems as though Mr. Sarnoff ought, in all fairness, to offer some sort of a reasonable 'swap' with the former customers to whom he sold these sets, now condemned by him. It is hardly fair to sell a man something and then agitate for a law to make it illegal for him to use the apparatus."

Gen. Ferrie Hopes for Day When Stars Will "Talk"

PARIS.—Gen. Ferrie, French director of telegraphs, has come out with a statement that it may be possible some day to hear from other stars, based, of course, on the discovery of Commandant Mesny and M. Jouast on the amplification of light vibration by vacuum tube until it becomes audible sound. The general maintains that within a hundred years radio will have made still greater strides. He says that so great an advance has been made in astronomy that he cannot but think that seeing is only slightly in advance of hearing.

Opening of Station WQJ Is Fixed for Thursday

WQJ will be on the air Thursday with test programs, and the official opening date has been set definitely for Thursday.

Engineers at the U. of I. Explain Zero Carrier Wave Experiments

Sharp Tuning Due If Researches Succeed.

So widespread was the interest created by publication in The Tribune of May 10 of experiments conducted at the University of Illinois with a method devised there for improvement in radio telephony that the engineering department of the university was prevailed upon to give a more detailed description of the objects sought. Obviously, complete details of the method involved are not ready yet for public circulation, but the accompanying article should prove of wide interest in view of the tremendous strides in radiocast possible in event the experiments bring success. Moreover, previous achievements in radio telephony at the university have focused wide attention on the new departure in research along that line.—Editor.

BY HUGH A. BROWN AND CHARLES A. KEENER.
[Electrical Engineering Staff University of Illinois.]

Experiments are now in progress in the electrical engineering laboratory at the University of Illinois on an improvement in radio telephony. All radio fans are familiar with the conventional method of radio broadcast transmission in which a so-called "carrier wave" is continuously sent out from the transmitter and when a sound occurs near the microphone this carrier wave is merely changed in amount in accordance with the sound frequency fluctuations.

Experiments now under way at the University of Illinois show that it is not necessary to transmit a carrier wave continuously, the electromagnetic wave being sent out only when a sound occurs. What is known as suppression of the carrier wave is used in long distance telephony over wires, but the carrier must be again supplied at the receiving end. With this new improvement this latter provision is unnecessary.

Like Spark Transmission.

Suppose we are listening with a receiver to a spark transmitting station. The receiver is affected, and we hear sounds only when the key is closed by the operator. Between these periods of "dot and dashes" no waves are sent out and we hear nothing. This is approximately the condition existing when using zero carrier transmission.

In the case of the old system the plate current of the detector tube suffers a large decrease as soon as the carrier wave comes in, and when speech occurs this latter value of plate current fluctuates a very slight amount.

Now, if we can eliminate the carrier wave when no sound occurs the detector plate current will suffer this initial large change with every change of the sound occurring at the microphone. Thus we have increased the efficiency of transmisison a great deal.

The tests with the University of Illinois transmitter showed that this was true. Many local fans listened to the transmission of music by this method and reported sharper tuning and easy tuning out of the local station to listen to distant stations.

Comparative Tests Made.

During the tests transmission frequently was changed from the constant current carrier wave system to the new zero carrier system so that intelligent comparison as to quality and sharpness of tuning could be made. Results were surprisingly satisfactory, although the writers are not sure that it will be a complete success. More investigation must be carried on.

'RADIOCAST' PROMISES TO STRIP LANGUAGE OF ONE INCUMBRANCE

RADIOCAST: Noun, meaning radio broadcasting station; or program or part of program transmitted by a broadcasting station. Examples: "Radiocast W-G-N"; "a radiocast received from W-G-N," etc. Verb, the act of broadcasting.

Radiocast, a derivation of Radio Broadcasting station, has made its bow to the American public and promises to be seized with open arms—if not by that same public at least by newspaper headline writers who are compelled to struggle with the old form in typographical limitations which cramp painfully. Moreover, the word applies itself equally well as a substitute for broadcast, in present, past and future tenses, and relieves the world of the pangs of having to listen to some careless linguist explain via the microphone that such and such "was broadcasted by us previously."

Radiocast should have an easy road to travel toward general adoption, unless, of course, something a whole lot better bobs up immediately.

HERE AND THERE

According to the Star, a daily newspaper of Johannesburg, Transvaal, Africa, under date of March 14, N. Grant Dalton, a radio amateur of that place, picked up radio broadcasting from Europe and America on the same evening. This linking of three continents was secured when Dalton, using a three tube set, picked up 2 LO of London and WGY, Schenectady. The Schenectady reception was recorded at 4 a. m., so it is evident that Mr. Dalton is a fan of the first water.

The University of Wales named a commission recently to study the possibilities of the use of radio in their lecture courses. They have decided to try it out, with the help of the British Broadcasting company, beginning with six lectures from each one of the English stations, on such subjects as ShaKespeare, history, music, and biology.

Tube receivers have replaced the old type of crystal detectors on fifty-one vessels sailing the great lakes, whose radio stations are operated by the Radio Corporation of America. The new sets are more sensitive than the crystal detectors, and insure greater efficiency and safety for great lakes traffic.

The fuss about whether artists should sing before the microphone for nothing or demand high salaries seems answered by the experience of one singer, who gave a selection in London not long ago. One listener telephoned to the studio to see if he cculd engage her.

Radio sets, as an essential part of modern camping equipment for yachts, motor boats, automobiles and country homes, will be emphasized in the National Outdoor Sports exposition, to be held at the Grand Central palace, New York, May 26 to 31.

Six stations will radiate the public policy committee session of the National Electric Light association to be held at Atlantic City Wednesday, May 21, at 8:30 p. m., eastern daylight saving time. Stations scheduled to broadcast are WEAF, New York; WCAP, Washington; WJAR, Providence; WGY, Schenectady; KDKA, Pittsburgh, and KYW, Chicago.

Considerable excitement was caused at radiocast WTAM, Willard Storage Battery company, Cleveland, O., on the afternoon of May 9, when a large American eagle picked the station's antenna towers as a feeding place. The bird had a large fish which was still alive as the eagle fed, and could be plainly seen from the ground as it flopped under its captor's talons.

The bird's visit lasted over half an hour. The station is located about five miles from the heart of the city, and it is believed that this is the nearest an eagle has come to Cleveland for years.

WHAD, Marquette university, Milwaukee, on a wave length of 280 meters, will respond to popular requests by again broadcasting Baker's Music Masters act, beginning at 9:30 p. m. (daylight saving) Wednesday evening. This program will be preceded, at 8 p. m., by a program by saxophone students and at 6:30 p. m. by the regular musical and speaking program.

Radio has added approximately 5,000 words to the English language since 1891, according to statistics just compiled by Dr. Frank H. Vizetelli, editor of the New Standard Dictionary.

WTAM [390], Cleveland, O., will give a concert program by a group of juvenile stars on Wednesday evening. The oldest performer is to be Gerald Forstner, 17 year old baritone. One of his numbers, "My Little Sweetheart," was written and composed by Miss Eunice Redmond, Cleveland high school girl. The youngest artist will be Dorothy Smith, age 9. She is a reader of considerable ability. Two boy sopranos, Lynn McLean, 12, and Jack Clemons, 14, will take part.

The headliner is Edward's Jolly Five Juvenile orchestra, composed of high school boys and girls.

Eiffel Tower station has broadcast the first play written for radio in France—a Greek comedy. French papers now are patting France on the back as being the first country in the world to produce a play written particularly for radio. They haven't heard from America apparently.

Julius Hossfeldt recently pleaded guilty in the Court of Special Sessions, New York, to fraudulently using the neutrodyne trademark on radio receivers. A six months' suspended sentence was imposed.

KGW, Portland, Ore., will broadcast a debate May 23 at 11 p. m. [Chicago Time] between Salem and Union high schools, debating for the championship of Oregon.

CKCH, Ottawa, one of the Canadian National railway's radio casts uses a full size locomotive bell, handsomely finished in heavy silver plate, in coming on the air and signing off.

Radio auditors in Canada continue to pay a $1 license fee for their receiving sets. Fees for other sets have been raised. They are $2.50 for amateur experimenters, $10 for amateur broadcasters, and $10 for ship stations.

Washington, D. C., May 17.—[Special.]—The time for evening amateur transmission has been moved forward an hour during the period of daylight saving, by order of the department of commerce. The nine district supervisors of Radio have been instructed to advise all general, restricted and special amateurs that they are required to observe a silent period from 7 p. m. to 10:30 p. m., local standard time, or from 8 p. m. to 11:30 p. m. daylight saving time, and on Sunday during church services from May 1 until Oct. 1, 1924.

Suggestions are being advanced in France to organize a system of broadcasting stations, provincial and Parisian, to carry Paris programs clearly over the entire country—like the Westinghouse stations, KDKA, KFKX and KGO.

A. R. A. IN FIGHT TO FREE ETHER OF ALL NOISES

Movement Is Headed by Noted Engineers.

At a meeting of the Interfering Radiation conference, held at the Engineers' club, New York, the conference voted to affiliate with and conduct its engineering activities henceforth under auspices of the American Radio association, a nation wide organization of listeners in, of which Alfred M. Caddell is secretary.

Prof. L. A. Hazeltine, Stevens Institute of Technology, presided as chairman and read a series of papers which had been prepared by John V. L. Hogan, Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith and A. F. Senn, which constitutes the beginning of a campaign to rid the air of howls and squeals.

Out for Clear Air.

"This campaign marks the beginning of the first nation wide determined effort to bring harmony and peace in the air and it will be followed vigorously until various kinds of interference are eliminated," said Prof. Hazeltine. "In this work we have the full cooperation of the industry which realizes that unless something is done and done quickly the interference problem will affect seriously the progress of radio. Engineers and editors are keenly alive to this situation, too, and the result is a cooperative effort to cleanse the air of these hideous noises."

The association aims to eliminate interference caused by improper handling of radiating receivers, by ships and commercial stations, faulty electrical transmission lines and other disturbing influences.

Work Is Outlined.

The work that the American Radio association was doing was outlined at the meeting by Mr. Caddell. Addresses were also made by Dr. C. B. Jolliffe of the bureau of standards, and by I. P. Rodman, president of the Independent Radio Manufacturers, Inc., and L. A. Nixon, representing the Radio Trade association.

French Farmers Planning Own Broadcast System

U. S. AMATEURS ARE LISTENING FOR SIGNALS FROM EIFFEL TOWER

Hartford, Conn., May 17.—Radio amateurs of the United States and Canada are listening for test signals from the Eiffel tower in Paris through special request to the American Radio Relay league from Gen. Ferrie, director of telegraphs for the French government.

A special short wave radio transmitter has been installed at the tower for this purpose, and reports of reception by amateurs of North America under varying weather conditions are to be sent to the A. R. R. L. and forwarded to the French government. Tests were begun May 4 and will continue through the month.

According to the schedule received by radio, Eiffel tower, call letters of which are FL, will transmit on waves of from 25 to 115 meters, as follows:

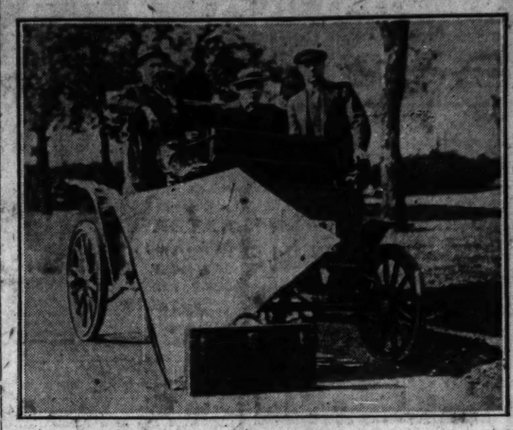
50 meters—May 18, 19, 22, and 23, from 10:20 to 10:35 p. m.

25 meters—May 24, 25, 26, 27, and 30, from 10:20 to 10:35 p. m.

50 meters—May 19, 20, 23, and 24, from 12:45 to 1 a. m.

25 meters—May 25, 26, 27, 28, and 31, from 10 to 10:10 a. m., from 4 to 4:15 p. m., and from 4:20 to 4:35 p. m.

PORTABLE RADIO RECEIVER IN USE FIFTEEN YEARS AGO



Those who say that radio is "still in its infancy" and that the modern receiving set has undergone but little study and development, will be surprised to know that the "portable" idea is at least fifteen years old.

Back in 1909 a south side lad was attracting attention with a "portable" set that he had designed to take with him on the family's annual vacation, spent on a farm near Syracuse, N. Y.

The boy was J. McWilliam Stone, today president of the Operadio corporation, manufacturers of a modern type of portable.

Stone's success with his early set, built when he was 15, caused considerable comment in the press. A crystal detector was used, and the aerial consisted of a slender aluminum wire carried aloft by flying the kite shown in the accompanying photographs. The "ground" was a narrow rod driven into damp earth.

With this equipment Stone was able to receive and send messages up to a distance of twenty miles. One of his feats, which was featured in the newspapers of the day, was the playing of a game of chess by wireless with another amateur some twelve miles away. By means of other equipment he had designed Stone actually neard in 1914 music broadcast from the Metropolitan tower in New York.

WJZ CONTEST IN SHORTHAND DUE SATURDAY

New York, May 17.—[Special.]—Station WJZ will broadcast the second annual radio shorthand contest commencing at 3 o'clock, eastern daylight saving time, Saturday, May 24. The contest will be open to any one capable of receiving dictation broadcast, as well as pupils and teachers attending the Shorthand Teachers' association meeting at the Hotel Pennsylvania.

There will be three-minute dictations at 80 words a minute for teachers and students and at 100 words a minute for stenographers.

Dust Always Detracts from Receiver's Efficiency

All radio sets should be inclosed in cabinets and the cabinets should be kept closed as much of the time as possible to keep out dust. Dust in a radio set will start more noises and cut out more signals than any other one item. Dust forms leakage paths between terminals on socket and elsewhere.

CKAC BUILDING HIGHEST POWER RADIO IN WORLD

7,000 Watt Set to Begin Operation in June.

Montreal, May 17.—[Special.]—CKAC, owned and operated by La Presse, Montreal, and often called the French radio university, soon will boast of the most powerful station in the world.

A 7,000 watt three phase rectification "All Canadian Make" Marconi set will send forth a message of good will to French Canadians scattered all over Canada and the United States at the beginning of June, when both the new installation and the entirely renovated studio will have been completed.

CKAC at the present time is operating on 2,000 watts and resorts to an all remote control system of entertainment following destruction of its $60,000 studio, April 26, which burned down as the consequence of a faulty flash light apparatus used in photographing a new microphone. Transmitting room and apparatus were spared.

Upsets Studio Styles.

Rebuilding of the studio will revolutionize the laws governing interiors of broadcasting rooms.

Instead of resorting to the all fat padding, with overdraperies of silk and velours, La Presse broadcasting studio will be one where echoes will prevail at their height.

The finish will be in carved ivory paneling for walls and ceiling, and tiles and cork will be used for flooring. This scheme is intended for the purpose of getting the full tones out of the specially built Casavant electrical pipe organ, within the studio walls. When a dulling effect is required, a system of wall curtains will be raised or lowered by electricity.

The object of the new plant is to inaugurate what will be known as "chats about French Canada for French Canadians," and to reach them whether in static belts or dead zones.

Wide Field to Cover.

Throughout the provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick there are today some 2,500,000 French Canadians and more than 2,000,000 others are scattered throughout New England states, Michigan, Louisiana, etc. There are also those of the French language in St. Pierre, Miquelon island, and others in the West Indies and the Guianas. The customary bilingual feature of CKAC will enable European listeners-in during the winter months, under favorable conditions, to participate in the programs.

45 Meter Wave Keeps Intensity by Daylight

LONDON.—Interest in the very short wave is growing apace in Europe. Two recent experiments lead people to believe that these short waves will be the most practical for the amateurs. Two English amateurs worked one night on 200 meters, while a third worked on a much shorter wave. The intensity of reception of the three was identical during the night; but in the daytime the short wave station remained strong as ever, while the 200 meter ones became much weaker. Military station, OC45, transmitting on 45 meters, is heard with equal clarity day or night.

W-G-N WILL GIVE AUTO CLASSIC IN ALL ITS THRILLS

Roar of Motors and Pit Orders to Be Broadcast.

Last year nearly 150,000 people attended the annual international 500 mile automobile race held on Memorial day at the Indianapolis motor speedway.

"SEN" KANEY.

This year millions of people in all parts of the United States, Canada, Mexico, and even in foreign lands will hear the exhaust of the motors of the high powered cars as they speed around the great saucer, thrill to the cheers of the throng gathered at the trackside, and for five hours experience the excitement of the brushes between skillful drivers in specially constructed cars as they flash past the judges' stand in the supreme contest for motor speed supremacy of the world.

Plans Running Description.

For the twelfth international 500 mile race will be carried to the ears of these millions by means of radio. Through the courtesy of the Prest-O-Lite company W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE-Zenith broadcasting station, will give a running description of the race from a specially constructed booth directly over the start and finish line, where a full view of the two and one-half mile track will enable "Sen" Kaney to follow every development of the race and detail it into the microphone.

From the speedway microphone this description will be carried by means of an American Telephone and Telegraph company circuit to the W-G-N transmitting room at the Edgewater Beach hotel and thence it will be broadcast to the four corners of the country.

Arrangements between W-G-N and the Prest-O-Lite company, which controls the exclusive broadcasting rights of the race, were completed several weeks ago. Since that time the engineers of the American Telephone and Telegraph company have been at work overcoming the many unusual difficulties of installation at the Speedway, which is five miles from the business center of Indianapolis, and providing a telephone circuit to Chicago.

Race Begins at 10 a. m.

The Speedway microphone will be opened at 9:30 o'clock Friday morning, May 30 with W-G-N's famous announcer, "Sen" Kaney, presiding. The race starts promptly at 10 o'clock, but the half hour intervening is one of the most colorful periods of the day. The grandstands, which have been filling for several hours, receive their capacity exhausting trickle of late comers and the main stretch boxes become a sea of humanity. The huge band of more than 1,000 pieces takes up its march around the track. Scarred, weatherbeaten drivers, some with grim faces, some smiling, but all with determination in the depths of their eyes or the lines of their faces, take their places at the pits and receive the plaudits of the thousands gathered across the narrow ribbon of brick and cement which forms the home stretch.

A bomb's explosion breaks through the noises of the field and the drivers and their mechanicians settle themselves as their cars are pushed into place at designated starting points. Another bomb and, one by one, the cars flash across the starting line at intervals of a few seconds, beginning the first of the 250 laps which must be made to finish the race.

Microphones in Pits.

Every possible arrangement has been made by W-G-N and Prest-O-Lite company officials faithfully to follow every moment of the race and to bring to listeners in every part of the country every detail of the contest and its attendant incidents.

In addition to the announcing microphone at the judges' stand, microphones will be placed in the pits so that, if listeners may not see, they may at least hear the orders and incidents of tire changing, replenishing of gasoline, water, oil, and parts under conditions where seconds may mean the difference between victory and defeat. Other microphones will be placed to pick up the cheering of the thousands in the grand stands, boxes, and midfield. Men will be stationed at the turns and along the backstretch to quickly report incidents that may escape the eyes of the man at the microphone.

Tidings Will Be Swift.

When the winner of the classic flashes across the line, W-G-N listeners will know his name and car before he has continued a hundred feet at his 150 mile an hour speed. They will hear the exhaust of his motor through the voice of the announcer and the screams of the thousands as they acclaim him.

Arrange to tune in on W-G-N on the morning of Memorial day—unless you plan to be one of the thousands at the speedway—and become one of the audience of millions even if you cannot be one of the thousands of spectators.

3,000 LISTENERS ENROLLED IN "RADIO SCHOOL"

Topeka, Kas., May 17.—[Special.]—The Kansas State Agricultural college "radio school" has had its first graduation, and more than 3,000 listeners in fifteen states will receive certificates of "attendance" this month.

After the lectures in each course were radiated, examination questions were sent to all who had enrolled. Examination papers are corrected and graded by the faculty and returned.

Four Radiocasts on Air in Rhode Island Capital

Providence, R. I., May 17.—[Special.]—This city now has four radiocasts, Dutee W. Flint's station, WKAP, at his Narragansett drive residence, having been opened this week. Stations now operating are: WKAP, WEAN, WSAD, and WJAR.

RECEPTION OF WEEK BETTER THAN EARLY LAST WINTER

BY DIALOG.

Static as a summer radio deterrent is, if I may say it, all the bunk. Just because it is warm weather is no reason for the putting away of radio sets, for good reception may be had in some form most of the time. Veterans of the dials will have no difficulty in recalling the fact that the country over this same atmospheric disturbance made reception anything but pleasant during October, November and December of last year. Yet nobody thought of making of it such a to do as to consider passing up their radio hours. They listened to the static, accepted a more confined radius for their receivers and marveled a bit that such things should be in ideal season. It was winter, you know (there are, of course, only two radio seasons), and they had been educated to the belief that winter and radio were synonymous. So they kept on listening, constructing, buying, and talking radio. That was as it should be.

Record to Be Kept.

Yet many will persist in believing that static is purely seasonal and is the sole barrier to radio enjoyment in summer, when, as a matter of fact, absorption and ionization play the big rôles in cutting down distance in the warm season.

That a record of this summer's conditions in the vicinity of Chicago may be kept, as any enthusiast would keep such a one, I have undertaken to "spin 'em" a bit every night until the advent of the "ideal season," in hopes that when next spring rolls around static will have taken its place among the discarded uselesses.

For those who would see for themselves, it is suggested that only a few moments need be spent in determining the kind of night ahead. Tune in the farthest station from which you have been accustomed to get clear reception. If the grating trains of static are so nearly equal to signal strength that reception is unpleasant, you can defer radio for the evening or else tune in on nearby programs, the signal strength of which must be static proof.

Undoubtedly you will find that the conditions prevalent during the last week—the record dealt with here being from Friday of last week to and including Thursday of this—will be met with repeatedly during the summer months.

Fine on Saturday Week.

Saturday week was such a night. Memphis, with one of the best programs WMC has put on in a long while, came in with perfect modulation. To the west, WOAW and WOC were unmarred. Eastward KDKA, WRC, WGI (at 6), WTAM, and several others were as clear as ever in winter. To the south the old standbys continued reasonably clear until 11, when static began to make amplification scratchy. It was such a good night for reception that WFAA and WLAG were heard in the loud speaker with two stages of radio frequency and the detector tube alone, words and music being clear fifteen feet from the horn. (AND THIS IS MAY!)

"G. C. A.," WBAP, Fort Worth, Tex.; who is G. C. Arnoux, chief announcer.

Sunday last was not so good. Attempts to listen to the coast between static and interference frazzled so many dispositions in proximity that it was decided the coast should go hang.

Monday was good. WLAG, WBAP, WSB, WDAF, WHAZ, WGR, WBZ, WOAW, WMAK (Lockport), and that bell-toned beauty of the Nebraska plateau, KFKX—one call signal that you always "get"—came in splendidly and untarnished.

Tuesday and Wednesday could be called fair up to 10 o'clock, and with head phones, minus amplification, would compare with many winter nights.

Thursday a Great Night.

Thursday last was the high light of the week, despite a spark set that wailed like a lost soul from 450 meters up into nearly 600 and mourned its way into the horn whenever the tuning failed of utter sharpness. Doubtless many who participated in enjoyment of Thursday evening will agree that the middle west had choice of many fine offerings, chief of which were the programs by the fifth and sixth grade pupils of the St. Louis public schools, broadcast through KSD; by the Minneapolis chapter of the Izaak Walton League of America, aired by WBAH; by the dedication exercises of Central Presbyterian (once the announcer gave it as Methodist) church at Kansas City, sent out by WHB, interspersed by a program of its own, and by WFAA, with an offering of old time music.

Never have programs been received more clearly, never have conditions been much better, and if you heard those St. Louis children singing "America," as KSD delivered it twenty miles from Chicago, you will be expected sooner or later to be heard demanding: "Whadja mean static?"

R. M. A. GAINING RAPIDLY AFTER TAX VICTORY

Keeps Capitol Vigil to Fight Levy Move.

Victory in the first round of the battle to prevent imposition of a tax on radio sets and parts, credit for which is given largely to the Radio Manufacturers' association, has rebounded to the benefit of that organization in the form of applications for membership from leading radio manufacturers all over the country.

Started a little more than a month ago by a handful of Chicago manufacturers, the organization already has attained national importance and is regarded generally as destined for a big place in America's greatest infant industry.

Temporary Officers Rule.

To avoid any impression that the association had been organized for the benefit of any small group, the first action after a charter had been obtained was to elect a temporary board of directors to serve for ninety days, at the expiration of which time all the members will participate in election of permanent officers and will fix the initiation fees and dues.

The temporary board of directors comprises: Herbert H. Frost, A. A. Howard, E. N. Rauland, A. J. Carter, and Frank Reichmann. Offices have been opened at 123 West Madison street, with Charles H. Porter in charge as temporary secretary.

Jump Into Tax Fight.

While the organization plans were being worked out for an association to protect the interests of the independent radio manufacturers, the radio tax was put into the federal revenue bill by the finance committee of the United States senate.

A survey showed that other organizations had been doing considerable work in arousing public sentiment against the tax, but that nothing was being done to organize any friendly members of the United States senate to fight the levy. It was found that practically all senators were more interested in other matters and that many of them didn't know the difference between the radio tax and the Dill bill.

The R. M. A. immediately sent Ernest R. Reichmann of Urion, Brucker, Reichmann & Bouten, counsel to the association, to Washington to fight the tax. While he was on the train the senate, without a record vote and without a single objection, voted the radio tax into the revenue bill.

Mr. Reichmann arranged for Senator Dill to have Senator Smoot permit reconsideration of the tax so that a record vote could be had. He then began organizing favorable forces in the senate, paying especial attention to holding the Democrats together and winning over the Republicans from the agricultural states.

Senators Hold Wrong View.

Mr. Reichmann repeatedly was told by senators that one corporation handled more than 90 per cent of all the radio business in the United States, that a senator who was a large stockholder in this company had told the revenue committee that the corporation was making fabulous profits and would easily absorb the tax instead of passing it on to the consumer. Senator Smoot made the same statement on the floor of the senate.

It became necessary to prove to the senators the utter falsity of this claim. This was done, with the result when reconsideration of the radio tax came up on May 2 it was knocked out of the revenue bill by a vote of 40 to 13. Of the fifty-three senators present, Mr. Reichmann had pledges of support from thirty-two of them.

Fear Another Tax Move.

The revenue bill is now in conference. Senator Smoot estimates that it falls short of covering expenditures anywhere from $160,000,000 to $500,000,000. This must be made up by more taxation.

The R. M. A. has been told that the conference committee is not friendly to radio and that an effort will be made to put the tax back into the bill by coupling it with taxes on the telephone and telegraph. Mr. Reichmann is in Washington to use his best efforts to prevent anything of this kind.

To date this tax fight has cost the association only $1,170.81.

Plans War on "Gyppers."

Besides fighting the proposed tax, the association will campaign for a tariff to protect American manufacturers against cheap material from Europe and to bring about an end to "gypping."

Feeds 38,000 Persons as Result of Radio Invitation

Edward A. Salisbury broadcast an invitation to a free barbecue from KHJ, and although his home is seventy-five miles from the city and inaccessible except by automobile, 27,000 acceptances were received by mail. On the day set, 15,500 machines arrived, 38,000 persons were fed and it is estimated that thousands more had to go hungry.

CHANGE LIKELY IN WAVE LENGTHS AT CONFERENCE

New York, May 17.—[Special.]—There are now 577 broadcasting stations, compared to 591 stations "on the air" last May. Since the first of the year the number of broadcasters has been on the increase.

It is likely that many of the present broadcast wave lengths will be changed by the radio conference Secretary Hoover plans to call shortly after congress finishes the present session. Building of more high power class B stations during the last year has exhausted the wave lengths from 303 to 546 meters assigned to class B stations. Wave lengths for class A stations are fast nearing saturation.

ISSUES RADIO LOG.

A neat radio log, which is being distributed free, has been gotten out by the Union Trust company. It covers fifty stations most commonly heard in Chicago and vicinity, with blank lines for other stations.

SPEEDS OF RADIO AND LIGHT WAVES DECLARED EQUAL

Engineer Disputes Claim of Capt. See.

New York, May 17.—[Special.]—Conclusions arrived at by Capt. T. J. See, government astronomer at Mare Island navy yard, California, that radio waves travel around the globe with a velocity of 165,000 miles a second as compared with 186,000 miles a second for light waves, are not supported by facts, according to John V. L. Hogan, one of the foremost authorities on radio in the country, and a member of the engineering committee of the American Radio association.

Upholds Old Measurement.

"The speed of light was determined accurately by several scientific investigators many years ago," said Mr. Hogan, "and the speed of longer electro-magnetic waves, in which category the radio waves fall, has been conceded by leading authorities to be the same. In fact, light waves are understood generally to be nothing more nor less than exceedingly high-frequency electrical vibrations in space, and all electro-magnetic waves, whether of high or low frequency, have been shown by analysis and experiment to have the same speed.

"Neither of the tests referred to by Capt. See can be taken as accurate bases for determination of the speed of radio waves. In the test conducted in March this year, when a wireless signal was sent from a station near New York to Warsaw, Poland, and reflected back in 0.054 of a second of time, there were two relays involved.

"One was used for transferring the radio signal to a wire which connected the receiver and the sender in Poland and the other connected the Polish transmitter to this wire line. The time lag caused by these two relays and the line connecting them easily could increase the round-trip time for the radio impulse from .046 to .054 of a second. That is, taking 186,000 miles per second as the speed of the radio wave, the total time for the round trip should be only about .046 of a second; so it is apparent that the difference of .008 of a second might easily be due to the wire and relay connections.

Says Waves Disprove Theory.

"If and when any change in the velocity of radio waves is demonstrated to be a fact, all the wave length ratings of broadcasting stations will have to be changed to conform with the new figure for radio wave speed. So fundamental a proposition should not, in the opinion of the engineering committee of the American Radio association, be announced without adequate experimental proofs. If, for example, a figure of 165,000 miles per second were taken as the velocity of radio waves, Radiocast WEAF in New York would have a wave length of 437 meters and WJZ a wave length of 405 meters, instead of the present ratings of 492 and 455 respectively. This is due to the fact that while the frequency of the wave length remains the same, the wave length varies with any change in velocity."

21,967 Radio Transmitting Stations in This Country

There are 21,967 radio transmitting stations of all kinds in the United States. This includes amateur stations, ship stations, trans-Atlantic stations, broadcasting and all other kinds of stations from which messages are transmitted.

Business of the British Isles Getting Down to a Real Downpour

By Mme. X.

LONDON.—[Special correspondence.]—The English do not deserve all the praise the world bestows on them as the best colonists in history. Had they a climate as balmy and interesting as that of Chicago; did they cook their green vegetables as we do, after the manner of the French, delicately, and have them well seasoned, they would never wander abroad to settle new and strange lands. If it rained five weeks out of every month in our country, and if we ate green vegetables boiled to a condition of soft sog, we, too, would become famous colonizers.

Transplanted to the droughts of South Africa and Australia, the Britisher becomes a perfectly different human being. His stiffness, assumed to withstand the enfeebling moisture of the British isles, becomes a vigorous liveliness exceeding even that for which we Americans are noted. While he may not make a point of altering the manner of cooking his vegetables, he has enlarged, with his larger horizon, his menu to include something besides vegetable marrow, parsnips and boiled potatoes. Such a diet as beef and mutton escorted by these three austere vegetables is bound to produce a proud and haughty race, one that can endure a rainfall of over an inch a day—such as we had yesterday—with cheerful equanimity.

To the porter of the hotel said we, with forced jocoseness, "I wish you'd turn off the heavenly waterworks for a day or so."

Said he in return, "We've only 'ad 'ite months of it, ma'am."

Where our weather reports predict rain, storms, and east winds, the English bureau announces "a depression over Ireland coming this way, visibility moderate," which really means that after four weeks of steady rain, it's going on to a real downpour. Daily that depression over Ireland is referred to as if the Irish were the real source of our discomfort.

In the House of Commons.

This putting the blame on the Irish is the last remnant of anti-Irish feeling now apparent here. For the most part public attention is devoted to the present Labor party and its doings in parliament. It may be that the weather bureau may speak after a while of "a depression over Downing street, and low visibility from the right side of the house," where sit the representatives of the Labor party and the Liberal party across the aisle from each other, the left side of the house apparently being entirely dedicated to the party in opposition, the Conservatives.

Sitting in the house of commons yesterday afternoon, listening to the debate that followed the previous day's presentation of the chancellor of the exchequer's budget for the coming year, I was struck with the difference in appearance between the members on the left and their political opponents on the right. As I was alone, with no one to explain the arrangement of the house, I speculated as to which side was which. I had already decided that the Conservatives were the smartly dressed, rosy cheeked, cheeked, well set up men below me on the left, when I recognized Lord Titchfield, the good looking, impeccable son and heir of the Duke of Portland, whom I had met at luncheon a few days before, stroll in, hands in his pockets, and sit down on the benches at the left, which confirmed my theory.

A few minutes later Lord Eustis Percy, tall, thin, poetic looking, likewise came in and, sitting down near Lord Titchfield, seemed to fall into a revery in spite of the earnest appeal of Mrs. Wintringham, a woman member of the Liberal party, for an inclusion in the budget of provision for the support of destitute widows and orphans. She talked well, much in the same way that American women of the same outlook in life would address a meeting. Her voice was sweet and clear, her manner gentle, what she had to say was not said with special emphasis, but in a slightly deprecating and appealing way. She much resembled in appearance Mrs. Arthur Ryerson, lacking her "pep" and self-reliance. She was mildly applauded by both sides, an attention not accorded the scattering speakers who immediately preceded and followed her.

There are eight "lady members" of parliament, as they call them here, three on the Conservative side, three among the Laborites, and two on the Liberal benches. Lady Astor, the Duchess of Atholl, and Mrs. Hilton Philipson are the three Conservatives; Mrs. Wintringham and Lady Terrington are the two members of the Liberal party, and Miss Bondfield, Miss Dorothy Jewson, and Mrs. Pethick Lawrence are the three Labor members, the first named being also a member of the cabinet. The lady members are not as yet obtruding the fact of their existence too strenuously on the rest of the house, the most enterprising one being Lady Astor, who occasionally runs foul of some of the more extreme of the Labor members.

Reeking with History.

Have you ever been to the house of commons? It would be a dull and unimaginative American who could go there without experiencing a definite mental or spiritual excitement. It is reeking with history and tradition of a kind which has directed the whole course of our past, present, and future.

That not large or architecturally impressive hall is one of the main reasons for our present and impending immigration bills, as well as for much of our legislation which is trying to preserve Anglo-Saxon ideals in a world where on every hand there are arising attacks both at the foundations and superstructure of what has been up to now the most successful experiment in government yet undertaken by mankind. Nor do we believe the time has yet come for the teachings of Marx and Lenin to be put into efficient operation by Anglo-Saxons.

It is many years since I last saw the house of commons, and it is unexpectedly small in size and simple in appearance. In fact, if all the 600 members of parliament were to gather there at one time, there would not be seats enough for them. When one side or the other speaks of "the opposition benches" it is a literal expression, as the members sit not, as ours do, in separate seats, but on long, leather cushioned benches, only the end man on the bench getting a wooden seat arm on which to lean. At one end of the hall on a dais sits the speaker of the house, his thronelike chair being under a wrought iron, peaked canopy. Immediately below him, but raised above the floor, sit the clerks of the house, four of them in curious gray perruques, with odd little curls, like shavings, rimming the stiff crowns of the otherwise straight haired wigs. They wear gowns and are picturesque.

A little below them is a long table that holds many books of reference and two embossed boxes, on one of which the prime minister lays his hand when he takes the oath of office. The boxes are supposed to contain precious documents, but really, I was informed by an attractive and sapient woman with a strong Scotch accent who sat next to me, there is inside only a Bible and some other piece of literature of no historical importance, perhaps a list of the members, or rules of the house. She further told me that the prime minister, Ramsay MacDonald, whose place was in the middle of the front bench devoted to the ministers on the right hand side, often sat with his long legs stretched out in front of him and his feet resting on this same long table. She was evidently a Conservative and spoke of the incident with evident disapproval.

When, a little later, I called her attention to a member on the left, an elderly man with a haughty air, who likewise sat with his feet resting on the edge of the same table, she didn't seem to take offense at it, but mentioned his name with pride, but not distinctly enough for me to grasp it. From her manner I gathered that the soles of the feet of the Conservatives are superior to those of their opponents—at least, in the minds of the supporters of the Conservative party.

Wives Aren't Peers.

When I asked my well informed neighbor as to why the Duchess of Atholl and Lady Astor were permitted to be members of the house of commons when their husbands were peers, she told me that that fact did not make the wives peers. The peers don't allow even those women who are peeresses in their own right (and in England there are a few cases of a peerage descending to the female line in the event of their being no male heir) to sit in the house of lords. This ruling of the lords makes the women eligible for the lower house, which nowadays every one who is interested in legislating for the empire prefers.

I should think the house of commons was only a little larger than half the size of our senate chamber. The entrance is opposite the speaker's chair. The seats for the members run in parallel lines down the sides of the hall. Above there is a balcony running around the hall. That part where women unaccompanied by men may, on permit, sit has a handsome openwork of carved stone, relic of the dark ages when it was the proper thing to requester and hide as far as possible members of our frail and dangerous sex. This hangs directly over the speaker's throne, but gives an excellent view of the main part of the assemblage. Immediately beneath it is the journalists' balcony, where each reporter sits in a little round sort of tub by himself.

Connecting with this is the rest of the balcony, the lateral sides of which are reserved for members on a full night when the house is overflowing. The members who sit up in these balcony seats may neither interpellate nor speak, though they may vote. At the further end over the entrance and the clock is the balcony where visitors sit. Immediately above the clock is a long wooden uncushioned bench where on one side members of the diplomatic circle have the right to sit and to which they may invite guests, while the other side is dedicated to the use of members of the royal family. The seat reserved for and often occupied by the Prince of Wales is the one nearest to the middle of this bench and immediately over the clock that ticks off the making of history.

In Pursuit of Tea.

The occasion when I happened to be present, owing to the courtesy of that most genial of Irish M. P.'s, T. P. O'Connor, was just at the close of an important speech by Mr. Thomas, minister for the colonies, speaking in support of the newly presented budget. When he sat down there was a scattering of the clans, and when I asked my intelligent Scotch neighbor where they had all gone, it being then nearing 6 o'clock, she said the "puir bodies" had gone out for their tea, being tired with the long talk.

I inquired as to whether women visitors could have tea in the house, and on being informed that directly behind the inclosure in which we were sitting, next to the women's dressing room, there was a tea room, I went there and partook of the best tea I had had in London and a slice of plum cake, the tea being three pence (thrippence) and the cake four pence, in our money a little more than 10 cents.

The Liberals seemed to be the most enthusiastic tea drinkers, for their benches were entirely empty for some time. The Labor members were next to them in enthusiasm, while many of the Conservatives seemed indifferent to the gentle beverage. As a matter of fact, most of those not in the house, I found out afterwards, were in conferences.

One thing struck this seeking observer, and that was the uniformly cultivated and delightful way in which all the speakers addressed the house. The Labor members were as exquisite and finished in their diction and as courteous in their manner as their opponents. They seemed more earnest, less inclined to satire, than the Conservatives. They did not look as well dressed or healthy as those on the opposite side of the hall. All of the Laborites present had interesting, grave faces.

Immediately below me was the one exception to this, Sydney Webb, whose rather full mustache and imperial and thick, well brushed hair gave him an un-English, rather dilettante look.

The visitors in the women's gallery were a quiet, well mannered lot, all of them intent listeners, telling each other in soft whispers who each speaker was. Occasionally some member would come up to see that his guest in this gallery was happy and interested and to point out some celebrity or other. On the whole, however, there were not so many lions on view as usual. Overhead through the yellow glass roof filtered down what seemed like cheerful sunlight but was really strong electric light which shed a soft and restful glow over the house.

Original Hall Burned.

The house of commons as it stands today, the hall in which the legislators meet, is of comparatively recent architecture, as it was rebuilt less than a hundred years ago after fire had consumed the original hall. But the site is the same as that in which the great struggle has gone on for centuries between the two great parties which under various names and guises have between them evolved, and are still at work evolving, the wonderful system under which this mighty empire is run. The two great changes in the last few years have been the altered position in point of power of the house of lords and the arrival of women on the benches of the house of commons.

It may not be known to many Americans that the only reason Lady Astor ran for parliament when she won the distinction of being the first woman elected to that body was not because she craved this sort of activity and conspicuousness but because the death of her father-in-law, the late William Waldorf Astor, made her husband a peer and therefore automatically threw him out of his seat in the house. He was popular with his constituents, and when his wife decided to stand for election in his stead, thus continuing the Astor family as representing them, she was elected by a handsome majority.

Although he inherited the title, Lord Astor did not inherit the larger part of his father's vast estate. The latter had differed so seriously from many of the views of his eldest son for many years (not having spoken to him for five years before his death) that he left as much of his money as was available to the second son, John Astor, known over here as "Jack" Astor. In the first enthusiasm of becoming a full fledged Englishman and a peer the late Lord Astor assumed all the customs of this ancient institution, including entailing as much of his fortune as he could to secure it to the eldest son. Like other peers before him, he lived to regret this entail and did what he could to break it.

Both the Astors, Waldorf and "Jack," are nice, likeable men and excellent citizens. The younger one, together with a group of men, bought the famous old London Times not long ago and he, the predominating force in the new régime, has high ideals of what he wants to make of this historic organ of news and information. Whatever the motives of the original holder of the title Lord Astor in abandoning his native land and becoming a citizen of the empire (a course of conduct which often seems to enrage many Americans, though we are made up of people who did the same as regards their own native countries), his two sons are making excellent records for themselves as being straight, unassuming, decent men among men.

London His Headquarters.

Many Chicagoites may remember the English artist, Glyn Philpot, who has visited Chicago on more than one occasion, leaving each time some brilliant piece of portraiture to adorn the walls of the homes of the socially prominent. The first time he came, which was some five or six years ago, he made a delightful portrait of the then Miss Isabel McBirney, now Mrs. Henry J. Stimson Jr. of New York. The next time he was in Chicago he painted spirited likenesses of Mrs. Potter Palmer and Mrs. Walter Brewster.

Mrs. Mary McCabe of 32 North Lockwood avenue announces the marriage of her daughter, Marian Lucille, to John J. McArdle on April 26 at St. Thomas Aquinas church.

Miss Hazel Moeller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Moeller of 1050 Pratt boulevard, and Walter Fetcher, son of Mrs. Mathew Fetcher of Los Angeles, were married recently.

The marriage of Miss Marie V. Kelly to James J. Kasparek took place on April 22. Mr. and Mrs. Kasparek are residing at 339 South Central Park boulevard.

He was introduced to our social and artistic world by Robert Allerton, one of the best known connoisseurs in matters artistic in Chicago.

Mr. Philpot makes London his headquarters and has in Holland Park, one of the western quarters of London, a charming studio with a wide lookout over this vast metropolis in every direction, as the building in which the studio is situated is on a high hill overlooking the land in every direction. Here he and his friend and protégé, Vivian Forbes, also a painter, live in a comfortable manner, with big workrooms for both and an attractively furnished apartment, or flat, as you must call it here, in which to carry on their everyday life. Mr. Philpot spent last winter in Egypt, where he had the commission to paint the portrait of the present and first king of the land of the Pharoahs, King Fuad. He made a stunning piece of work of it, depicting the new made potentate in a mixture of European and oriental garb which typifies and symbolizes Egypt today.

Sir John Lavery is another artist well known both here and in America. His wife is one of the belles of the great world in London today. She originally came from Chicago, where she was, as Miss Hazel Martyn, one of the beauties of her set. He has been so hard at work this winter on an order for a painting representing the house of commons that he is now recuperating from his severe labors at Contrexiville, the well known French watering place. This canvas is a companion piece for one he painted a year or so ago of the hourse of lords, and both will be historical memorials of the present times and of the men who Chicagoans of Note.

Among Chicagoans playing a more or less conspicuous part in London's smart set is Henry Channon Jr., who is a great favorite among the ultra fashionable. The Marchioness Merry del Val, wife of the Spanish ambassador to London, is quoted as saying that it is impossible to have a lively and well done party unless that charming "Monsieur Harry Channon" manages it. He has a little house in a chic neighborhood where he has a cozy ménage and whence he goes forth into the gay life which goes on all the time in this much the biggest city the world has ever yet evolved.

A slight idea of the size of London reached our feeble comprehension the other night when two members of the X. family went from our simple hostelry in South Kensington to the subscription ball which Miss Olga Nethersole got up to raise money for her pet charity, an association to teach hygiene to the ignorant masses. This ball had royal patronage, the Duke and Duchess of York and some other less notable folk heading the list of patrons. Through the rainy night we drove and drove until we came to the place where the ball was given, Lord Leverhulme's fine house on the hill in that part of London known as Hampstead Heath. It is one of the noted mansions of the metropolis and contains one of the most noted private collections of old masters in London. The house itself is set in a garden famous for its roses, which was to have been lighted and thrown open to the guests had the night been a fine one. But the palatial dwelling itself was crowded with guests.

It was interesting to us because of the opportunity to see the really beautiful collection of Reynolds, Gainsborough, and other masters of that time as well as some of today's painters. Directly over our heads in the spacious picture gallery in which supper was served hung a huge canvas depicting our old friend, King George III., in court regalia, a seemingly more than life size portrait of him. I am sure Sir Joshua was paid by the square foot when he was given the order. Across the way on the other side of the big chimney place was an equally formidable one of Queen Charlotte by the same famous artist. The rest of the room was hung with many, more interesting and beautiful portraits and landscapes, and was a stately hall of art. Its walls and ceiling were of dark paneled wood, and the lighting was the usual indirect kind used in picture galleries.

The supper was a much more elegant one than any we get up for our charity balls. The tables, seating from six to eight, were spread, not only with flowers, but also with a variety of made dishes, quail in aspic, salmon in hollandaise sauce, lobster en cocquette, chicken and truffles, and other dainties. An elaborate menu, beginning with turtle soup, was served by extremely correct butlers, each one suggesting that he had never passed a dish to any one less august than a belted earl. Both white and red wine were offered the thirsty guest, all for tickets costing a guinea. A most effective vaudeville accompanied the supper, being furnished by a picturesque band of Spanish singers, musicians, and dancers.

Throng in the Ballroom.

Downstairs a well dressed throng danced in the ballroom much as Americans of the same class would, though not with quite the same gay manner. The great dance room was nearly 200 feet long, though quite narrow in proportion to its length. Eight of the biggest, most brilliant crystal chandeliers I have ever seen hung the length of the ballroom. The house must be built on the side of a hill, as this long hall, although it was one flight of stairs below the main entrance of the house, opened out with long French windows onto a terrace—a terrace where the rain splashed merrily that evening.

Upstairs there were big reception rooms, also heavily hung with paintings of a later school than that of the seventeenth and eighteenth century artists. Here there were tables set for mah jongg and bridge, with teachers of the former game offered at so much per lesson, as it is still a new sport here in England. Fortune tellers and crystal gazers looked eagerly at us seeking custom, but those who came early were not yet curious as to what the future might hold for them, and the dance and supper seemed the most imminent gifts fate had to offer them.

Lord Leverhulme himself was much in evidence on the dance floor. He was a short, sprightly, gray haired mortal, clad in black satin knee breeches and the conventional black swallowtail coat. He is fond of dancing, and seldom left the ballroom, never wasting any time between partners, but whirling one out after the other. They know nothing of our custom of cutting in in English balls, and therefore dance each turn through from beginning to end with the same partner.

Lord Leverhulme is one of the outstanding personalities in England today. His great achievement, Sunlight soap, is known from one end of the empire to the other because of his advertising methods. In a land of rain and mists, to be able to buy a bit of sunshine for a few pence is alluring. And they buy it. He went to South Africa shortly after the war, taking with him a staff of sixty clerks and secretaries. There he took a whole floor of the principal hotel, the Mount Nelson, and proceeded to put Sunlight soap on the African map by traveling all over the country in a special train, going as far north as Rhodesia. When he returned to England he had the great southern colony lashed to his mast, both as a buying country and as furnishing the raw materials from which his soap is made. It was an enterprise of truly American size and character.

A little incident at the end of the evening made a distinct impression on the X. family. A taxicab had been ordered for our departure. We stood at the foot of the front steps waiting to get into it. As the groom opened the cab door a man, bareheaded, clad in court dress, including black satin breeches, calmly brushed us aside, jumped into the cab in spite of the gently voiced protest of the author of this p. p. p. and, giving an address on Grosvenor square, drove triumphantly off. "Men and boys first in this country," we muttered with some vehemence. It took twenty minutes to get another cab from a distant cab stand, as the Leverhulme mansion is far out of the way in London, a half hour's drive from South Kensington.

WOMEN'S CLUB PAGE

Open Season for Program Making in Women's Clubs

By Kate Webber.

JUST at this time, the open season for program making among all women's clubs of the city and vicinity, an account of the activities of the conference of club presidents and program chairmen is of more than usual interest.

This organization is unique among women, or among men for that matter; its members point to it with pride as the only one of its kind in the world. The founder, Mrs. Charles S. Clark of Beverly Hills, has been the president for seven years, since its organization, and has guided the conference into a powerful organization representing 125 clubs.

Moving spirits of the conference point out that its main selling point is its humanness, as differing from the usual woodenness of a bureau. It is an instrument made up of the presidents, program chairmen, and heads of departments of each club, as its name indicates, and thus interest is always at the highest point in procuring the best of program material.

The conference meets on the third Thursday of each month in Recital hall, Fine Arts building; that is, from October until April. During April and May there are meetings each Thursday, in order to expedite the appearance and elimination of artists who desire to appear before women's clubs. At these weekly hearings each artist is given a few minutes in which to expound his message, or to demonstrate his talent, as the case may be. Names, dates, and terms are discussed, and questions important to the welfare of clubs from Joliet to Waukegan are decided. It is safe to say that the bulk of club programs of Chicago and its environs come out of these Thursday morning sessions.

In this clarified way the program builders know what they are taking back to their club members, and artists know just how to plan their seasons, which also is important. The tremendous influence of such an organization, so closely touching the lives of thousands of clubwomen, scarcely can be estimated. It is the policy of the conference to set a high standard for its own programs, and also to throw its influence on the side of all movements tending toward the moral, cultural, or spiritual growth of the community.

"The Making of America" is one program for the next season of which the conference feels especially proud, playing as it does such a large part in helping along the wave of Americanization. Speakers on this program include Dean Shailer Mathews, Prof. J. Paul Goode, and Prof. William E. Dodd of the University of Chicago, Horace Bridges, Prof. William James of Northwestern university, Heinrich Maurer of Lewis institute, John Vennema, consul general for the Netherlands; Countess Lisi Cipriani, and Jens Jensen.

Another program, the speakers on which also will be available for the coming year, will be one on "The Fundamentals of American Culture," with eleven prominent persons listed as exponents of the thought.

Clubs within a radius of fifty miles of Chicago will benefit by this process of program making, which is a benefit to the members as well as to the community at large.

In addition to Mrs. Clark the officers are: Mrs. W. D. Hurlbut, Mrs. Elmer A. Eulass, and Mrs. Frank N. Prime, vice presidents; Mrs. R. E. P. Kline, recording secretary; Mrs. J. Marc Fowler, corresponding secretary; Mrs. J. E. Armstrong, treasurer.

MRS. CHARLES S. CLARK.

Mrs. Charles S. Clark is entering upon another term as president of the Conference of Club Presidents and Program Chairmen, which organization she founded seven years ago and which since has grown to be an interesting factor in procuring programs of great value for the 125 clubs composing its membership.

MRS. HOWARD C. MATHISON.

Club Ethics

By Maude Swalm Evans.

"DID you hear anything of my friend, Mrs. Holmes, when you were out in the 28th district?" the department chairman asked the state board member who had recently returned from a lecture tour.

"I didn't hear anything else," answered the state board member.

"She wrote to me that she had been nominated for district president but something horrid had happened and she'd withdrawn. She said she'd tell me all about it when she saw me. Do tell me what you heard," urged the department chairman.

"The trouble was started by an overzealous supporter of your friend the wife of a local politician. In an effort to assure Mrs. Holmes' election, the overzealous one put a real political kick into the campaign by digging up some old scandal about Mrs. Holmes opponent, and broadcasting it.

"Things were certainly interesting out there. The men were all chuckling—when their wives weren't around. The women were talking back and forth excitedly. You could feel the tension. Then Mrs. Holmes suddenly saved the situation by withdrawing and giving out the statement that the stories had never been substantiated; that she hadn't believed them when she heard them several years before, and didn't believe them now; that she hadn't been consulted about the use of them as campaign material, and didn't approve of such use; that she withdrew her name as candidate in favor of her opponent who was well qualified to fill the office, and that she was going to vote for her, and ask her friends to do the same. And if you please, the opponent was elected almost unanimously."

"How splendid of Mrs. Holmes. My, but I'm proud of her."

"You may well be. They say down there that they're going to push her for our next state president. And if they do, I believe she'll be elected."

MRS. A. D. HULQUIST.

Mrs. A. D. Hulquist is chairman of a charity May party to be given next Thursday evening at 8 o'clock at the Rainbo Gardens by the North Shore Service league. The moneys derived will be used to buy clothing for needy patients at the Municipal Tuberculosis sanitarium and its eight dispensaries.

Colonial Coverlet Guild Organized

A HAND woven coverlet—memorial of our sturdy American foremothers—was the card of admission carried on the arm of each of a group of women who met recently at the home of Mrs. D. Harry Hammer and organized the Colonial Coverlet guild, which has for its purpose the study and exhibition of American antique and modern woven coverlets, old shawls, quilts, samplers, and china.

MRS. D. HARRY HAMMER.

Mrs. F. W. Gunsaulus was elected honorary president; Mrs. Hammer, president; Mrs. G. A. Butler, vice president; Mrs. Frederick T. Avery, treasurer and historian.

There were exhibited at this initial meeting coverlets—sometimes referred to as "American tapestries"—from Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Ohio, North Carolina, Maryland, Kentucky, and even the Isle of Man.

It was decided that eligibility to membership in the guild should consist in the possession of a woven coverlet. Two books of reference will be compiled, to contain photographs of all coverlets which come to the knowledge of the guild, as well as information concerning weaving.

One of these books will be for the use of guild members, the other will be kept by the Chicago Historical society for the use of students of applied art.

Miss Caroline McIlvaine, librarian of the historical society, and Mrs. Hammer are completing plans for a joint exhibit of coverlets by the society and the newly organized Colonial Coverlet guild, to be held in the rooms of the historical society at a time soon to be announced.

WILL RADIUM AT LAST OPEN THE DOOR OF THE GREAT UNKNOWN?

If you are sick and want to Get Well and Keep Well, write for literature that tells How and Why this almost unknown and wonderful new element brings relief to so many sufferers from Constipation, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Gout, Neuritis, Neuralgia, Nervous Prostration, High Blood Pressure, and diseases of the Stomach, Heart, Lungs, Liver, Kidneys, and other ailments. You wear Dernen's Radio-Active Solar Pad day and night, receiving the Radio-Active Rays continuously into your system, causing a healthy circulation, overcoming sluggishness, throwing off impurities and restoring the tissues and nerves to a normal condition—and the next thing you know you are getting well.

Sold on a test proposition. You are thoroughly satisfied it is helping you before the appliance is yours. Nothing to do but wear it. No trouble or expense, and the most wonderful fact about the appliance is that it is sold so reasonable that it is within the reach of all, both rich and poor.

No matter how bad your ailment, or how long standing, we will be pleased to have you try it at our risk. For full information write today—not tomorrow. Radium Appliance Co., 1407 Bradbury Bldg., Los Angeles, Calif.

HOW TO READ CHARACTER : : : :

By HUGO WESTERBERG

IN the life of the ameba the one purpose of outstanding importance seems to be to work for a living. Its energy and time are spent collecting from its environment necessary provisions to keep the individual alive as an individual. The propagation of its kind is a minor issue affecting its career as a matter of no great moment.

The same thing is to a large extent true of man, although in his case the fact is not quite so readily seen. According to Freud, for instance, the instinct of reproduction is paramount in the life of the individual and all disharmonies of the personality have their ultimate basis in the sexual urge. It should be remembered, however, that germ cells are apart from the rest of the body organism, nourished and protected by it and their own mission is to form a new individual. Extended observations wil show that the one desire, the state of condition of which is of permanent importance even to members of highly civilized races, is the desire for food. Food supplies the energy required for uninterrupted life and growth of the individual. Around this desire the great and small activities of man have been carried on throughout history, receiving therefrom, directly or indirectly, their strongest and most enduring motive power. The whole structure of present day business has been built up to permit every human being to acquire sufficient nourishment safely and without too many hardships or dangers.

Desire for Food.

The power and capacity of the food desire is estimated by looking at the visible part of the equipment for consuming food, that is, the mouth. The circular muscle opening and closing the mouth shows by its form and size the condition of the food desire as being forceful or lacking driving power. In application, the desire for food appears as acquisitiveness in general and means not only an appetite for real food ready to eat right away, but also for things that can be exchanged for food at some future time, such as money and property of all kinds, or that assure a satisfactory supply thereof as, for instance, position or business connections. The corresponding ability is an ability to make a personal profit from an undertaking.

The construction of the mouth muscle shows most clearly in a side view and approaches one of two extremes: heavy protruding lips and thin, straight up and down lips. It should be noticed that the red parts of the lips are not expressive of the food desire and therefore should be ignored in the estimate thereof.

Heavy, protruding lips are of three kinds:

The upper and lower lips equally prominent constitute the most efficient arrangement of the food intake and means ability under all circumstances to provide well for oneself. See figure 1.

When the upper lip comes out farther than the lower lip it also means strong desire for personal profit, with the tendency to go out and get it. See figure 2.

If the lower lip sticks out farther than the upper the desire for profit is strongly present but the tendency is more to make use of opportunities that come along, than to go out and find them. See figure 3.

When the upper and lower lips both are thin the mouth muscle as a whole is weak and it means an absence of strong desires for personal profit of any kind and therefore poor chances for material gains above strict necessities. See figure 4.

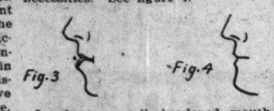

Fig. 3 Fig. 4

In short, a well developed mouth muscle indicates dominant food desire and ability to make more than needed for existence; a fairly developed mouth means normal food desire and ability to get enough; a weak mouth muscle means insufficient food desire and difficulties to make even a bare living unless other circumstances are very favorable.

Auxiliary Desires.

The energy required to make man, a living machine, go is furnished by the food he eats. To make this energy available there must be an oxidation of the fuel which takes place in the process of respiration. A supply of air is taken into the body through the nose, the mechanical construction of which therefore may give some indication of the nature of the energy production in the man. The high ridged, outward curved bone forms the strongest construction and therefore the best protection and belongs to the boss type of individual who needs it most. The low ridged, inward curved nose bone is the weakest construction and is suitable only for the peaceful subordinate. The straight nose indicates a tendency in intercourse with other people to be neither commanding nor obeying but independent.

The outward curved nose shows a strong tendency to dominate other people, ignoring their personal preferences of action for the benefit of one's own. The person with this sort of nose always has a feeling of superiority and importance and wants to be treated with marked respect. With the desire naturally goes the ability to command. See figure 11.

The inward curved nose shows a tendency to please others by submitting to their wishes and by exhibiting a spirit of humbleness with regard to one's own. See figure 12.

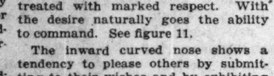

Fig. 11 Fig. 12

Straight nose shows indifference to orders and disinclination to command. It indicates a desire to work alone, without supervision, and when in need of assistance leads by persuasion. See figure 13.

Fig. 13

The desire for physical pleasures in general and corresponding ability to enjoy the satisfying thereof is expressed in the size and shape of the red parts of the lips. When these parts are large and full they show a tendency toward sensuality. See figure 8.

Fig 8

When they are of normal proportions they indicate normally developed affections. See figure 9.

If the red parts of the lips are thin it means lack of ability to enjoy pleasure of the flesh, which may develop into habitual coldness broken by sudden passions. See figure 10.

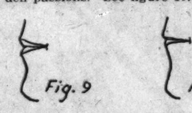

Fig. 9 Fig. 10

Personality Traits.

The distance between the intakes for food and air, as shown by the length of the upper lip, marks the state of emotional excitability due to feelings of uncertainty as to the beneficial outcome of an action.

When the upper lip is short emotions are easily aroused and difficult to control: The owner is apt to worry unnecessarily. See figure 5.

If the upper lip is of normal length a normal sensitiveness exists and a reasonable control of emotions. See figure 6.

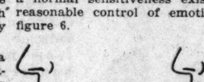

Fig. 5 Fig. 6

When the upper lip is long feelings are only slowly aroused and a dispassionate attitude prevails. See figure 7.

Fig. 7

The nose is not only the equipment for taking air into the body but also the smelling tool, and as such it indicates in its fleshy parts various traits. The sense of smell serves to give information about things that are disintegrating and rotting, and, with reference to the food desire, actions and situations that are dangerous to the well being of the owner.

Looking at a side view of the nose we find three different arrangements:

If the nose is hanging down over the upper lip it means the owner is on guard against own actions that might be of disadvantage to his interests. His attitude in general becomes cautious. He will seldom make enemies through faults of his own. See figure 14.

When the underside of the nose sticks straight out from the upper lip it indicates actions and opinions founded on a well balanced attitude towards others. See figure 15.

If the lower line of the nose is slanting upward from the upper lip it means the owner is on guard against actions on the part of others that might hurt him. His feelings of friendliness or hostility are easily aroused and his own actions and opinions, therefore, hasty. See figure 16.

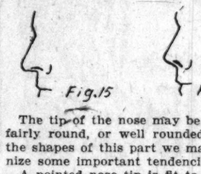

Fig. 15 Fig. 16

The tip of the nose may be pointed, fairly round, or well rounded. From the shapes of this part we may recognize some important tendencies:

A pointed nose tip is fit to pry into corners difficult of access and denotes curiosity and ability to criticize in an impersonal way. At the same time, it is easily damaged and makes the owner sensitive to slights and insults. See figure 17.

A fairly rounded nose tip indicates a healthy attitude in social intercourse. See figure 18.

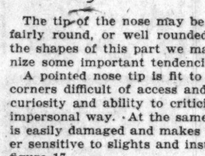

Fig. 17 Fig. 18

A well rounded nose tip shows deficient desire for information and inadequate sense of fitness of things. This construction, however, helps to reduce the friction generated by the irritating contacts in one's environment. See figure 19.

Looking at the front view of the nose, there are again three different shapes.

If the ridge of the nose is widening out in the lower end—that is, if the fleshy part is strongly developed—the sense of smell is keen, and this means ability to notice weaknesses in others and a tendency to overlook their strong points. See figure 20.

When the ridge of the nose is straight it means that the sense of smell is fairly well retained but permits the use of other senses whereby a more fair estimate of fellow man is probable. See figure 21.

If the ridge of the nose is wide at the top but narrow and undeveloped in the lower part the sense of smell is weak and cannot be used to size up human nature. There is a tendency to be aware only of good points in people. See figure 22.

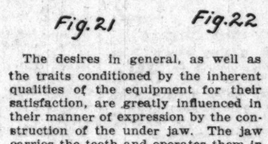

Fig. 21 Fig. 22

The desires in general, as well as the traits conditioned by the inherent qualities of the equipment for their satisfaction, are greatly influenced in their manner of expression by the construction of the under jaw. The jaw carries the teeth and operates them in biting off and crushing the food as a preparation for the digestive process. The variation in structure is correlated to a number of different tendencies, which may be interpreted about as follows:

Looking at the chin from the side we find:

If the chin projects it means a tendency to hold on strongly to anything in one's possession, an opinion, a purpose, or an action once it has been started. At the same time there is an unwillingness to change from a state of rest, which leads to procrastination. See fig. 23.

When the chin comes straight down it indicates fair ability to hold an opinion or a purpose and fair starting time. See fig. 24.

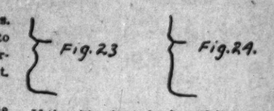

Fig. 23 Fig. 24.

If the chin slants backward it means low ability to hold on to an opinion or purpose, but carries with it ability to act quickly. See fig. 25.

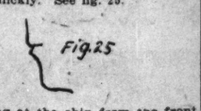

Fig. 25

Looking at the chin from the front we find:

A broad chin indicates strong endurance in execution of any tendency and ability to carry a heavy load of responsibilities. See fig. 26.

A medium wide chin indicates fair endurance in the execution of any tendency. See fig. 27.

Fig. 26 Fig. 27

A pointed chin shows lack of endurance in the execution of any tendency and limited strength to carry a load of responsibilities. See fig. 28.

When the jaws are wide it indicates strong power to crush obstacles. May lead to ruthless treatment of fellow men. See fig. 29.

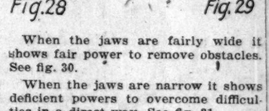

Fig. 28 Fig. 29

When the jaws are fairly wide it shows fair power to remove obstacles. See fig. 30.

When the jaws are narrow it shows deficient powers to overcome difficulties in a direct way. See fig. 31.

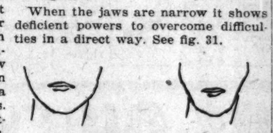

Fig. 30 Fig. 31

The above, then, are the main points in the physical valuation of man. It may be noticed that no attempt has been made to describe traits in single words, but rather to outline tendencies conditioned by the shape of a tool. Neither have these tendencies been considered as good or bad, but merely as free standing facts that may or may not cause action or influence behavior depending on the situation.

A strong desire for food is not a favorable or unfavorable trait in itself, nor may the possession of a pointed nose or a protruding chin be considered a fortunate thing under all circumstances. The correct definition of traits has been one of the great difficulties in judging human character which, however, will be largely eliminated when the processes of intellectual and moral valuations also have been explained.

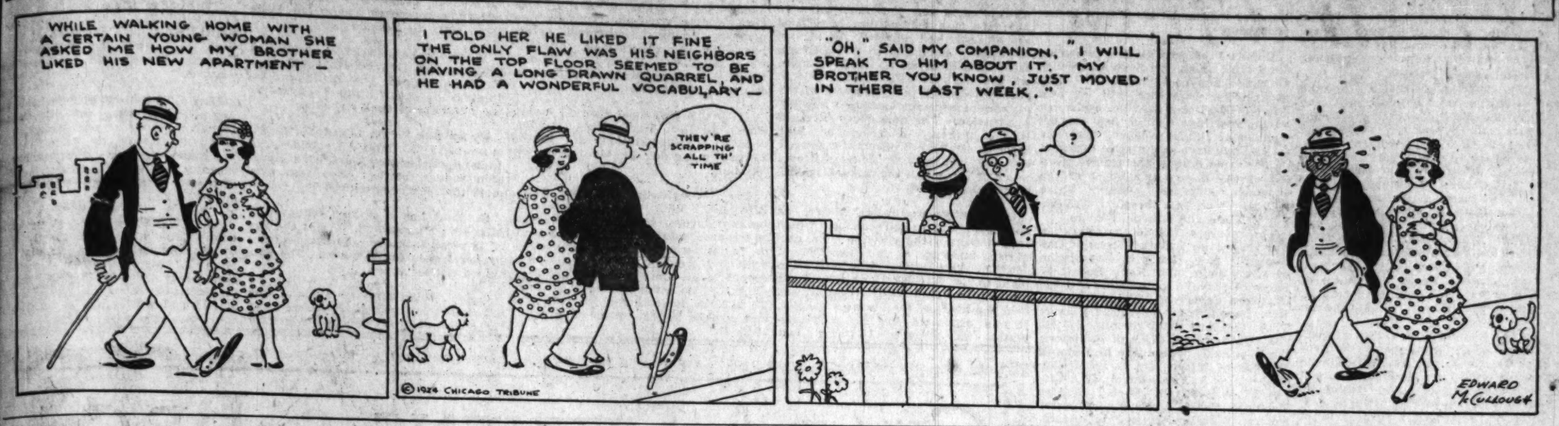
EMBARRASSING MOMENTS



They Laugh at These in Vaudeville

RIALTO.

Alton and Alward:

"Some people think singers live longer than other human beings, but they do not live any longer."

"It only seems longer."

"Well, let me tell you a knowledge of music is the greatest thing in the world. Every person should have a musical education."

"My musical education will soon be complete. I am studying music, I am."

"You're studying music?"

"Yes; ain't that noble?"

"Why, that's fine; and what have you learned thus far?"

"Just give me the name of any phonograph record, and I'll tell you what's on the other side."

"I was told my voice and my face are enough to be proud of."

"Your face?"

"Yes. I was told I looked like a queen."

"You look more like the deuce."

"And I am of an artistic temperament, too. You know I paint."

"Yes, most girls do."

Naming Three Most Fascinating Men Stumps Woman Jury

Here's a problem for you.

The Tribune and the Sunday News, New York, submitted to a jury of twelve women the question, "Who are the three most fascinating men in the world?" Almost without exception they selected the Prince of Wales first, John Barrymore second, and——

And then they disagreed. Many of them insisted on having another day's time to decide on No. 3.

What do you think of their selections? Is it true that the Prince of Wales and John Barrymore cause more heart palpitations, per capita, than any other two men now living?

Read the verdict of the jury and then see if you can decide who ought to be No. 3.

WHO are the three most fascinating men in the world? And why?

To a jury of twelve New York women, some of them world famous, these questions were put, but on only two men could they come to anything like an agreement. If they just had to stick until an agreement was reached on the third most fascinating man it is likely that the jury would still be out.

His highness, the Prince of Wales, easily leads the list. Almost without exception the jurywomen named him first. To all womankind he is Prince Charming come to life, young, good looking, magnetic, democratic, an excellent dancer, and a true sportsman. The fact that he is yet to find his princess adds glamor to his personality, said the jury.

Seems Like a Prince.

John Barrymore wins second place, far ahead of all others, because he is the greatest genius of the American stage—and the best looking. He, too, seems like a prince in a fairy tale, though like quite a different prince from the Prince of Wales. As Wales seems democratic, a good mixer, Barrymore, said the jury, seems aristocratic, dignified, romantic.

The jury was quite enchanted by Barrymore, but as to the next most attractive man——

Some of the jurywomen suffered agonies before finally naming their third choice. Their candidates for third honors included Rudolph Valentino, Douglas Fairbanks, Conway Tearle, Charlie Chaplin, H. L. Mencken, King Alfonso of Spain, Richard Barthelmess, and many others. Count Salm wasn't even considered.

King? O, No.

Miss Rebecca West, English critic and writer, gave a prompt answer to the question: "Who are the three most fascinating men in the world?" She said, "Why, most any man except her husband!"

Pressed to name three she declared she was not well enough acquainted with the women of America to be able to judge their favorites. The old world? There is not such interest in public personalities. How about the king of Spain? "No!" she protested emphatically. "He's terribly ugly! He has a fearful color. He looks as though he had been soaked in tea!"

Miss West finally named the prince of Wales, John Barrymore — "and should I say Douglas Fairbanks or Conway Tearle?" she asked.

Thyra Samter Winslow, writer, who recently declared she and her husband had decided to take a vacation from each other, was reached at her New York apartment. She selected the prince of Wales, John Barrymore, and H. L. Mencken, the literary critic and writer. She insisted that all the women of New York are crazy about Mencken.

Mary Knows the Answer.

Mary Pickford, who has been in New York for the last few weeks, placed Wales second on her list. Perhaps the reader will be able to guess whom Mrs. Fairbanks picked first. "Your question really should read 'Who are the second and third most fascinating men,'" declared the sweetheart of the movies. She picked Barrymore for third honors.

Fannie Hurst, the author, decided on Wales and Barrymore, and then came to a complete stop. "I suppose we couldn't include such men as Hudson Maxim or D'Annunzio, could we?" she asked. "No; I suppose not. They're too old to appeal to the flappers, aren't they? How about Heifetz? I suppose they don't even know who he is!"

Madge Kennedy picked Wales first by virtue of the glamor of his good looks and position. "He has shown that he is very much of a person as well as a prince," she said. "I should pick the king of Spain second because he is such a cut-up. I think he appeals to the more sophisticated women. For third place I choose Charlie Chaplin because he is a great artist."

Puts Father First.

Miss Polly Damrosch, society girl and daughter of Walter Damrosch, musical composer and conductor, exclaimed, "Who are the three most fascinating men? What an overwhelming question! If you had asked me who are the 300 most attractive men it would be easy, but three——!" She confessed she would need at least a day. The following day she announced that her selections were her father, Al Jolson, and President Coolidge.

"That's so much more original, don't you think, than picking the Prince of Wales and Jack Barrymore," she explained.

A woman jury named the Prince of Wales (left) the most fascinating man in the world. John Barrymore (right) was chosen as second. The jury could not agree on a third.

The rest of the jurywomen swung an almost unanimous vote for the Prince of Wales. Here is what they said:

Miss Marie Frenger, 86th street, Brooklyn, stenographer: "The Prince of Wales is my first choice. He is democratic and a good dancer. I'd love to have a dance with him, just as other girls have had. He has lots of nerve to fall off his horse as often as he does. Reginald Denny and Eddie Rickenbacker are the other two."

Miss Beatrice Berger, Powell street, Brooklyn, private secretary: "First, the Prince of Wales. I don't like him personally, but most women do. For the same reason I name Rudolph Valentino second choice. John Barrymore is the type I really admire. He is an artistic type of man, not just good looking."

Miss Miriam Smith, Gates avenue, Brooklyn, student: "The Prince of Wales is fascinating. There is something nice about him, I don't know what it is, which appeals to most women. Richard Barthelmess is clean cut, handsome, and manly. Douglas Fairbanks is my third choice. He was the idol of all women until he got married."

Agree on Wales.

Miss Madelyn Winkler, Myrtle avenue, Brooklyn, student: "I just adore the Prince of Wales. I hope he doesn't fall off his horse again. Conway Tearle and Rudolf Valentino are the other two men I admire the most, because they are great lovers."

Mrs. Eleanor I. Lewis, Clairmont avenue, insurance: "The Prince of Wales comes first. He has a wonderful personality. It is a new and unique personality for a prince. H. B. Warner is a wonderful actor with a most pleasing voice and an inspiring stage presence. Most women admire young Teddy Roosevelt, who is almost as magnetic and likable as his father."

Miss Harriet Baruch, West 150th street, home girl: "My three choices are John and Lionel Barrymore and Douglas Fairbanks. I name these three because women, as a rule, admire actors most. Of all actors, these three are the most fascinating."

"I got my start through picking up a pin."

"Yes, I know. The merchant was impressed by your carefulness in picking it up, called you back, and made you head of the firm."

"No, I picked up the pin, and sold it for a thousand dollars. It had a big diamond in it."

Mother—Where did you get that nickel?

Willie—You gave it to me for the heathen.

Mother—Then why did you keep it?

Willie—Well, teacher said I was a heathen. J. A.

All Figured Out.

The two boarding house keepers were comparing notes.

"I find it pays to serve breakfast piping hot," said one. "Except on Sundays. Then I serve it cold."

"Well, on week days my boarders have to eat breakfast in a hurry, and, if it is hot, they don't have time to wait for it to cool off, so they eat very little. On Sundays they eat less because it is cold. I assure you, Mrs. Jones, but for this discovery I should have lost money this season." M. M.

Getting Even.

Prisoner—Yes, sir! I am the man

Judge—Twenty years. G. N.

From His Observation.

After all sorts of hints which showed clearly that he might be of some use in the diplomatic service later on, Johnny had succeeded in extracting a dime from his indulgent mother. He failed to thank her, however, and she was annoyed at his display of bad manners.

"Johnny, you are most forgetful," she said. "I have given you a dime and you are simply rude. What do you say when you get something?"

"I can't say," was the reply.

"You can't say? What do I say to daddy when he gives me money?"

"Is that all?" quoted the knowing child. J. B.

NEWS OF THE RELIGIOUS WORLD

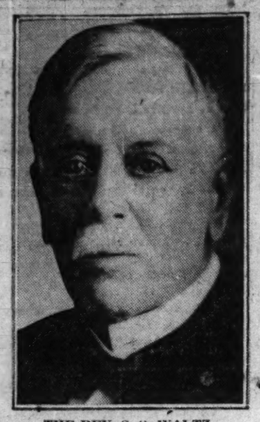
Presbyterians to Thrash Out Fundamentalism

By the Rev. W. B. Norton

THE general assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America will meet this week in Grand Rapids, Mich. The assembly officially opens on Thursday morning, but meetings of an educative, evangelistic, and preliminary character will be held for two days preceding. As an evidence of the comity existing between the various evangelical denominations, the Fountain Street Baptist church, new, spacious, and having every convenience for a large gathering, has been offered to the Presbyterians as the place of meeting and the offer accepted.

This year's moderator, the Rev. Charles F. Wishart, D. D., president of Wooster college and former pastor of the Second Presbyterian church of Chicago, will preach the annual sermon. The first business thereafter will be the election of a moderator for next year, and at once the lineup of theological battle will be made. The avowed fundamentalists have agreed, it is announced, on the Rev. Charles E. McCartney, D. D., pastor of the Arch Street Presbyterian church, Philadelphia. William Jennings Bryan, who was defeated last year as a candidate for the moderatorship, is expected to be present and champion the cause of Dr. McCartney while booming himself at all times as a possible candidate. Dr. Robert E. Speer is frequently named as a possible candidate of the opposition, although it is understood he has positively declined to stand as a candidate. Prof. Erdman of Princeton university is also being considered.

There will probably be several candidates nominated. The questions of war and pacifism, divorce, and prohibition are certain to bring discussion, but the dominating issue is fundamentalism in doctrine, involving the attitude of the First Presbyterian church of New York towards its Baptist pastor, Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick. The question of legality as well as of doctrine enters into the controversy.



THE REV. S. S. WALTZ.

The Illinois State brotherhood meets in annual convention at Holy Trinity Lutheran church, Addison street and Maple square, tomorrow and Tuesday, opening with a banquet tomorrow evening.

When six years ago three general divisions of the Lutheran church merged into the United Lutheran Church in America the brotherhood was officially adopted as one of the agencies by which it is to carry on its world work. Dr. S. S. Waltz, who for thirty-five years was the successful pastor of the First Lutheran church of Louisville, Ky., was chosen as executive secretary of this men's movement of the united church, with administrative offices in Chicago. The work has grown rapidly throughout America and is extending into foreign lands. In order to identify the men of the church actively with its various activities Dr. Waltz has traveled extensively in this and other countries. In 1920 he was a delegate and one of the speakers in the World's Sunday school convention in Tokio, extending his travels through the orient, visiting the various mission fields of the church, and returning through Palestine and the near east.

The brotherhood is making preparations for its biennial national convention to be held in Chicago, Oct. 19-21, at the Edgewater Beach hotel. Chicago Lutheran men have taken as their slogan for this occasion: "A Thousand Chicago Men, Oct. 20."

The laying of the cornerstone of the chapel of the seminary of St. Mary's of the Lake at Area, Lake county, on Sunday, May 25, will be the first official act of His Eminence Cardinal Mundelein since his return from Rome. This ceremony will be attended by thousands from Chicago. Under the direction of the Holy Name society special trains will be run over the North Shore electric line every fifteen minutes beginning at 8 a. m. The Soo line will run a special train from the Grand Central depot at 1 p. m., leaving Area to return at 6 p. m.

The $1,000,000 check presented to his eminence by the priests of the archdiocese will go toward the completion of the seminary group, which will be one of the finest institutions of its kind in the world. Pope Pius XI. is especially interested in the development of plans for the seminary of St. Mary's of the Lake and sent a special blessing to all who contributed toward it.

The Holy Name society expects representatives of each of the 259 parish branches in the archdiocese to attend the ceremony.

The Hyde Park Presbyterian church, Blackstone avenue and 53d street, will hold dedicatory services today, the occasion of its opening. It is rare that one reads of a Presbyterian church spending as much as $65,000 in redecorating and rearranging its auditorium. It has been turned from a conventional type of church auditorium into a beautiful pure Roman type. The pipe organ has cost about $30,000 and other improvements bring the total cost to $100,000.

At 11 a. m. the exercises and sermon of dedication by the pastor will take place, and at 4 p. m. a community service will be presided over by the Rev. Paul G. Macy, president of the Hyde Park Council of Churches. Words of greeting will be brought by the Rev. Charles W. Gilkey, the Rev. A. J. McCartney, neighboring pastors; the Rev. Clyde R. Wheeland, moderator of the presbytery of Chicago, and the Rev. Ernest D. Burton, president of the University of Chicago, to which response will be made by the Rev. Ralph Marshall Davis, the pastor of the church. The Rev. Frederick F. Shannon will preach the afternoon sermon.

In the evening at 8 o'clock a musical service, the numbers on the program by special request, will dedicate the new organ. On May 23 there will also be a special organ recital by Arthur Dunham of Sinai temple.

The baptismal font, a masterpiece of Yellin, Philadelphia, is the gift of Mr. and Mrs. W. Coates Foresman, as a memorial to their father, the Rev. Robert Brown Foresman. Its construction is rare and of symbolic character.

Dr. Ralph Marshall Davis has been pastor of Hyde Park church for nearly two and a half years, coming to Chicago from the pastorate of the First Presbyterian church of St. Louis.

Fred B. Smith, an official of Johns-Manville company of New York, who recently was given considerable publicity through his activities as chairman of the Citizens' Committee of One Thousand for Law Enforcement when he secured and published Dr. Charles W. Eliot's reply to Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler on the prohibition issue, will be the speaker at the Sunday Evening club tonight.

Mr. Smith, whose subject will be "Is America a Great Nation?" has been intimately connected for many years with international Y. M. C. A. work, and with the Federal Council of Churches. He was sent abroad by the late President Harding to study the problem of international friendship, at which time he visited nineteen countries, studying the attitude of the people, the politicians, and the rulers of the nations toward peace and war. During the last six months, he has been in conference with President Coolidge frequently.

He organized the Men and Religion Forward Movement in 1912, which took him around the world, and rendered significant service both in the Spanish-American war and the world war.

Mr. Smith will make some reference during his address next Sunday night to the opening of Boys' week in this city. At the preliminary meeting, Clifford W. Barnes will give the usual informal Bible talk on "What Jesus Stood For."

At St. Barnabas' church, 4241 Washington boulevard, on Wednesday night at 8 o'clock, the annual acolyte's service of solemn evensong and procession for Chicago and vicinity will be held. It is expected at this occasion that two hundred men and boys will be in the procession.

Illinois Presbyterians are preparing for a third annual conference at which they are hoping to have 1,200 delegates. The conference will be held June 16-20 at Jacksonville, and most of the meetings will be held on the campus of Illinois college. The conference will have at the same time and on the same campus the annual meeting of the Illinois synod and of the Woman's Synodical society. There will, therefore, be a threefold conjunction of state and national leaders.

The speakers include the following: The Rev. John Timothy Stone of Chicago, the Rev. Henry C. Swearingen of Minneapolis, the Rev. Robert E. Speer of New York, the Rev. William Chalmers Covert of Philadelphia, the Rev. Josiah Sibley of Chicago, Dean T. A. Clark of the University of Illinois, Dr. James J. Coale of Baltimore, the Rev. Reid Dickson, the Rev. Frank W. Bishop Hoban will also administer the rite of confirmation to a class of 200 at St. Monica's colored church at 2 p. m., at St. Gabriel's church at 4 p. m., and at St. Leo's church at 7:30 p. m.

The annual rally of the Presbyterian Young People's federation will be held on June 2 in the Third Presbyterian church, Ashland and Ogden avenues. Fred Allen is chairman of the program committee.

The Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin, D. D., pastor of the Park Avenue, formerly Fifth Avenue Baptist church, New York, will preach today and next Sunday in Mandel hall, University of Chicago.

The baccalaureate sermon in connection with commencement exercises of the Northern Baptist Theological seminary will be preached this morning at the Second Baptist church by the pastor, the Rev. Ralph A. Jensen. The annual missionary sermon will be preached in the evening at the Tabernacle Baptist church by Prof. Jacob Heinrichs, a former missionary in India. Commencement exercises will be held on Thursday evening in Tabernacle church. On Thursday morning Byrne hall and Wilkinson hall will be dedicated. An evangelistic conference will be held in Byrne hall beginning tomorrow.

At the national conference of Community Church Workers of America in Philadelphia May 6-8, it was voted to make Chicago the national headquarters of the movement. The Rev. F. A. Gageby, pastor of St. Paul's Union church of Beverly Hills, Chicago, is chairman of an executive committee of sixteen to carry on the organization between conference sessions and the Rev. O. F. Jordan, Park Ridge, Ill., is executive secretary. The aim of the organization is to reduce the overchurching in American towns and villages by forming union or federated churches. Where a single church of the denominational type has the field, it is encouraged to broaden its terms of membership to include all Christians in the community. A field worker will be supported the coming year who will respond to the invitation of communities which wish to form a community church by the federation or fusion of existing churches. He will also visit a number of communities where no church organization is now functioning, due to the fact that competition has killed out all organized religion. The Unity Messenger, published at Park Ridge, is the official organ of the movement. At the conference a resolution was passed declaring the promoters of the movement were not forming a new denomination. The missionary work of the community churches is done through established agencies approved by the evangelical denominations, much of it through the denominational boards themselves.

Community church, Park Ridge, has concluded a financial canvass which makes certain the erection of a new parish building at an expense of $60,000. This is the first unit of a plant to cost $150,000. The church has a triangle of land with streets around it in the heart of the business district. It was organized in 1917, and celebrated its seventh birthday last Wednesday. It has 375 active members, having received sixty-four new members during the year from seventeen different organizations. The pastor is the Rev. O. F. Jordan, who was for fifteen years pastor of the Disciples church of Evanston.

St. John's Episcopal church, Irving Park, the Rev. W. O. Butler, rector, reports a subscription of $35,000 towards a needed $45,000 for a new building.

Camp Houghteling, at Twin Lake, Muskegon, Mich., has in process of building twelve chapter houses, each to accommodate seven boys and a leader, for summer outings in connection with boys' work of the National Brotherhood of St. Andrew of the Episcopal church. The camp will open on June 23, and the dedication of the buildings and grounds will take place on Sunday, June 29.

Women the World Over

Carrying greetings from Mayor Mickey to President Coolidge, Miss Gwendolen Lazier has started on a 600 mile horseback ride from Belleville, Ont., to Washington.

When she paid $500 for a prize winning cat, Mrs. Edward Sams of Egham, England, gained the distinction of leading all other English buyers in the purchase of such animals.

By sending 593 pins to pit for an average of 197 2-3, Miss Alice Feeney, of Indianapolis became America's champion woman bowler. She won over more than 500 competitors.

St. Paul has a woman blacksmith, Miss Ella Fransworth, who at the age of 18 years took over the business run by her father for 25 years. She is a skilled worker at the anvil.

Queen Wilhelmina of Holland has asked that her yearly allowance from the government be cut in conformity with the reduction in salaries made for all civil service officeholders.

Twenty-five years ago farm women in the United States manufactured more than a billion pounds of butter each year, while the production last year was but a small fraction of this amount.

Miss Lillian Bayliss, who holds the distinction of being the only theatre manager known to have produced all of Shakespeare's plays in one theatre, has gained another distinction. Bayliss recently received the honorary degree of master of arts from Oxford university, London.

After fifty-three years of service in connection with educational work among women in the near east, Miss Mary M. Patrick, founder of the Constantinople Women's college, and its president for thirty-four years, has resigned and will return to America at the close of the present year.

Present Owner Going to California.

Located in the heart of a fertile valley 2½ miles from Crystal Lake, Ill., and comprising a tract of 476 acres of the finest farm land in the State—Sunset Valley, with its thoroughly modern buildings and equipment, may well be called the ideal farm.

For the past twenty-five years Sunset Valley has been in the hands of its present owner, and during all that time it has been operated as a stock and dairy farm. Any one becoming the possessor of this farm, therefore, makes for better and richer lands. At the present writing there are 112 head of tested cattle, mostly Holstein, with a few Jerseys, and the owner intends to increase this splendid herd until he will have 150 milk cows at all times. This milk is sold to the Bowman Dairy Company in Crystal Lake, the present price being $2.85 per 100 pounds. The above list would be incomplete without mention of the 10 head of good work horses and the modern farm machinery, which includes a threshing machine, two tractors, a silo filler, corn cutters, binders, harvesters, and, in fact, every machine calculated to do the most work with the least amount of manpower. All these machines are in fine working order; most of them are less than three years old.

There are fifteen buildings, all equipped with every modern convenience. The owner's home is a beautiful two story frame with wide, screened verandas, sleeping porches, four baths luxuriously equipped, six bedrooms, large living rooms with open stone fireplace, dining room, sun porch, servant's bedroom and bath with separate stairway, large ice room, pantry and kitchen, and two basements; electric light, steam heat, running water, and a half acre of beautiful lawn and flower gardens surround this home, and the orchard of apples, peaches, grapes, and small fruit adjoining the home is set back a quarter mile from the main road, thus avoiding noise and dust of traffic.

There is another modern home of finest construction, equipped with electric light and running water; also a five room apartment, which is occupied by a tenant. The silo likewise, is equipped with electric light, steam heat, and running water.

The barn and outbuildings are all well built and lighted throughout by electricity. The large cow barn is at present equipped to hold sixty cows, with additional room for more. All milking is done by four double unit milking machines. A 600 ton silo is connected with this house, and two horse barns, buildings are a large horse barn, hog house, granary, carriage shed, calf barn, tool house, chicken house, ice house, implement shed, and corn crib. Crystal Lake is 42 miles from Chicago, on main line of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad, and 60 of the finest Limited trains daily make the trip in less than an hour and there are at least a dozen that run in the morning and evening in an hour and a half. The better trains are equipped with parlor and dining cars. It is possible to eat breakfast in Chicago and dinner in Crystal Lake, and one returning to Crystal Lake, and dine again aboard the Chicago Flyer.

Crystal Lake itself is a thriving village of 3,000 inhabitants, motion picture house, banks, general stores of all kinds, and can boast of a splendid school. The lake is ideal for boating and swimming in the summer and skating in the winter.

As to the roads, Sunset Valley Farm is about 54 miles from Chicago as the Ford flies. There are several main arteries of travel that lead almost to its doorstep; at present the shortest comes to within 8 miles of the farm, the intervening 8 miles being good gravel road. The Rand-rd. comes within 12 miles and also has good gravel road connecting. The new Barrington-rd. now nearing completion, will connect with Sunset Valley and cut the motoring distance to 49 miles.

Sunset Valley must be seen to be appreciated. If you contemplate the purchase of a property that will insure you the life of gentleman's ease and comfort, it is recommended to pay a visit to SUNSET VALLEY.

CADILLAC

Unusual Bargains Now on Sale

The spring buying season has brought into the stock of the Cadillac used car departments an assortment of used automobiles of various makes and body styles which are on sale at a wide range of prices.

Cadillacs as well as other makes are on display at prices from a few hundred dollars up. All of these used cars have been carefully appraised by our own men, inspected and tested by expert Cadillac mechanics who know motor cars, and priced at figures which are honest indexes of their market value. A used car in our stock selling at $400—or at $3,000—is worth exactly that amount and will give the purchaser his full money's worth in service.

Specially featured are our Reconditioned, Warranted Type 61 Cadillacs. These cars are sold under the regular 90 day warranty applied to new cars and represent the best used car values obtainable today. They have been completely gone over in our own service shops and put in A1 mechanical condition, completely repainted, cleaned thoroughly, and equipped with 5 new cord tires and a tire cover for the spare. These cars offer to the person seeking an automobile in $1,800 to $2,500 class dependability, riding and handling ease, and long life, considerably greater than can be secured in a new car selling at the same price.

We welcome visits to our display. Those desiring it will be gladly taken through our service department, where they may see it reconditioning in actual process.

REAL ESTATE NEWS

PLAN $400,000 BUSINESS BLOCK AT JEFFERY-71ST

Two Apartment Buildings Also to Be Erected.

Here's another big building project for that fast developing south side business thoroughfare, East 71st street. Samuel J. Hachtman, attorney, and Max M. Cohen, who is with the Automobile Bonding company, yesterday secured a ninety-nine year lease on the vacant southeast corner of Jeffery and 71st, 275x115, from the board of education and have had plans drawn for a $400,000 three story business block and flat buildings.

On the 71st street frontage will be a building to contain six stores, a second floor devoted to offices and a third floor with a 115x50 hall.

On the Jeffery side two court apartment buildings, to contain a total of forty flats will be erected. They will have a frontage on Jeffery of 225 feet and will be 115 feet deep. The name of the architect will be announced later.

The lease calls for $8,500 annually for the first five years and 6 per cent of a revaluation of the property for the balance. Work is expected to start shortly with completion date set for early fall.

SEARS-ROEBUCK PLAN BUILDING EXHIBIT IN LOOP

Sears, Roebuck & Co. have leased the north half of the second floor of the Boyce and Iroquois buildings, which are being made into one structure to be called the "Thirty North Dearborn building," at a cost of approximately $200,000 from plans by Alfred S. Alschuler. The big mail order house will use 3,000 square feet for five years at a ter mrental of $50,000 for its building exhibit department.

The Brownlee Realty company also reports having leased for the owners, David Labowitch and Ben I. Morris, the fifth, sixth, and seventh floors of the south half to the Electric club, now at the Morrison hotel, for five years from Oct. 1 at a term rental of $75,000. The premises are now used by the Covenant club. Alex Friend & Co. represented the Electric club.

REAL ESTATE NEWS

START IN JUNE ON $2,000,000 PRINTING PLANT

Will Be Largest of Its Kind in World.

BY AL CHASE.

Work will start next month on the largest printing establishment of its kind in the world, the $2,000,000 plant of the W. F. Hall Printing company, on the seventeen acre tract bounded by Diversey, Wellington, Kilpatrick, and the Northwestern railway. A picture of this huge group of structures is shown in a nearby column.

The present Hall plant is in the block bounded by Chicago avenue, Superior, Townsend, and Kingsbury. This will be either sold or rented when the equipment is moved to the northwest side on completion of the new buildings next spring.

500 Foot Office Building.

Architects Weiss & Niestadt have drawn plans for a main administration building of concrete, two stories, with foundations for a third, to be 500 feet long, fronting on Diversey. It'll be 100 feet deep and will be occupied by the offices, receiving department, employment, and welfare departments, and cafeteria on the first floor. The general offices, photo-engraving, composing room, and foundry will be on the second.

To the north will be a one story concrete and steel building, 500x800, with only one interior dividing wall. This will house the presses, bindery, and other manufacturing departments.

Largest of Its Kind.

The Hall concern is said to be the largest in the world doing commercial printing of catalogs and magazines. Among the concerns whose catalog work it does are Montgomery Ward & Co., The National Cloak & Suit, Charles William stores and Sears, Roebuck & Co. Photoplay, the System magazines and others are printed.

An interesting angle to the acquirement of the site for the new plant was told at the time it was bought, July, 1922, but is worth repeating. Henry G. Zander and his partner, George Frederick Goester, of the realty firm of Koester & Zander, originally owned 435 acres in the neighborhood. Gradually they subdivided it and built it up with homes.

"Help Keep the City Clean."

At least twelve large industries have been turned down and at higher prices than the Hall concern paid. No firm which had a foundry, a machine shop, or a lumber yard in its plant was considered. A buyer must sign an agreemetn to use electric power and thus do away with smoke and grime, and to erect a building architecturally attractive.

The Hall company fulfilled all these requirements and signed an agreement. You'll perhaps notice a big smoke stack in the picture, but that is only for heating the plant. All power will be electrical.

Plenty of Playgrounds.

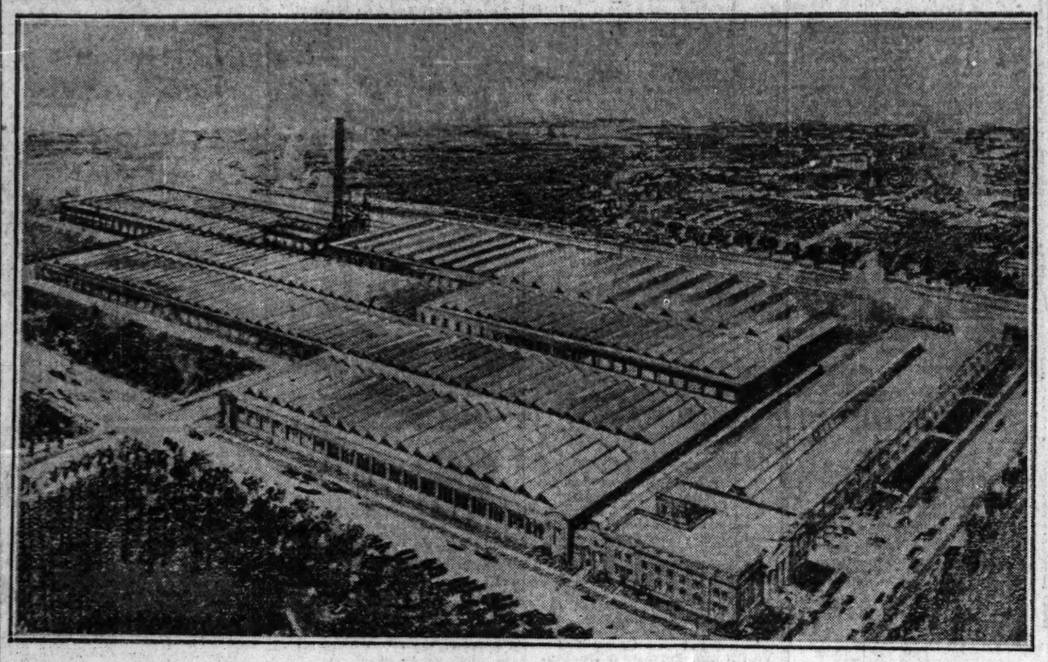
The company intends to use considerable space for their employés recreation. They bought 580,000 square feet of space and their buildings will only cover 450,000. The balance ultimately will be for expansion, and meanwhile will be used for baseball diamonds, tennis courts, outdoor swimming pools, etc.

The Hall company was founded in 1892 by William Franklin Hall.

BROTHERS BUY RESIDENCES.

William Schukraft has bought the residence at 531 Linden, Oak Park, from Oliver N Caldwell for a reported $55,000. T. B. Roberts represented the buyer and T. B. Prescott of G. H. Schneider & Co. the seller. Fred Schukraft bought the house at 730 Linden from H. A. Huskey.

One of World's Largest Printing Plants



Above is the $2,000,000 plant of the W. F. Hall Printing company to be erected on the seventeen acre tract bounded by Diversey, Kilpatrick, Wellington, and the C. & N. W. R. R. tracks, from plans by Weiss & Niestadt. More is told in an adjoining column.

HARDING SELLS 106 ACRES NEAR WHEATON FOR NEW SUBDIVISION

Another big subdivision is planned for Wheaton as a result of F. W. Harding, general executive of the American Shorthorn Breeders' association, selling 106 acres of his 270½ acre farm on Roosevelt road, one mile west of the Wheaton city limits. Weiss & Rosenthal Brothers, a new realty firm, formerly active in California, paid $375 an acre for the property and will at once subdivide it as Harding's Park addition to Wheaton.

It will be platted with four lots to the acre. Although wooded the new owners intend to plant more trees. The acres sold are at the east end of Mr. Harding's farm.

Mr. Harding also sold his residence and six acres to Joseph E. Jannotta for an undisclosed consideration. Mr. Harding's farm is across Roosevelt road from E. N. Hurley's place and Col. R. R. McCormick's Cantigny farm.

$750,000 FLAT BUILDING FOR SOUTH EVANSTON

Milton Plotke has taken title for the firm of Plotke & Grosby to the 150x176 at 934-42 Main street, Evanston, and will at once erect one of that suburb's largest apartments buildings, to cost $750,000, to be fireproof, and to contain 150 flats of from two to four rooms. Axel V. Teisen is architect. They'll be ready by May 1, 1925.

Louis Duksby, who bought the site last December for $52,500, sold it to Mr. Plotke for $65,000. H. O. Stone & Co. are to make a loan on the new building.

RADIO CONCERN LEASES SPACE.

Nathaniel Baldwin, Inc., of Salt Lake City, one of the world's largest makers of radio supplies, has established a midwest distributing branch in the Midland Warehouse and Transfer company's building at 1524 South Western avenue, in the central manufacturing district.

Illinois Golf Club—West of Glencoe

This is how the new $175,000 fireproof home of the Illinois Golf club, designed by Walter W. Ahlschlager, Inc., will look when erected on the club grounds west of Glencoe. Of course it'll have all the luxuries and conveniences of the modern country club, but in addition will have what it is claimed is something new in this part of the country, a locker room that doesn't look like a jail, with tiers of lockers. Instead the room will be square, with lockers along the four walls. In the center will be a plunge pool, with a roof open to the sky, but with a sliding glass roof for chilly days.

The club has 108 acres, bounded on the north by Lee, on the west by Skokie road, and on the east by the C. & N. W. R. R. Mayfair cutoff. The grounds have been laid out by George Tillinghast, golf architect, with construction in charge of Joe Roseman. Temporary quarters are to be erected at once. Work on the new clubhouse will start around Aug. 1.

The club has about 140 members, with a limit of 275. Arthur C. Hammond is president, Wilbur J. O'Brien is vice president, Walter W. Ahlschlager is treasurer, and Harry W. Redman is secretary. The directors are Walter Beckley, Harry Mosier, and William B. Huey. The organization is not affiliated in any way with the Illinois Athletic association, although such a rumor was current for a time.

Start Work on Theater and Bank Building on 71st St.

On April 29, 1923, a picture of the proposed four story Jackson Park National Bank building, to be erected on the north side of 71st, between Euclid and Jeffery, was printed in this department. Since then new plans have been drawn by Architect William P. Doerr and an 1,850 seat theater included.

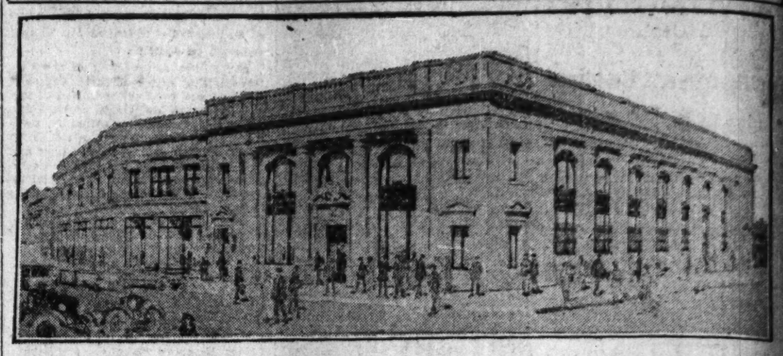
Work has just started and completion date is set for Feb. 1, 1925. The cost is put at $1,000,000 and S. W. Straus & Co. have underwritten a $650,000 loan. The bank will occupy the Jeffrey avenue corner.

The building will contain a fifty room hotel, stores, shops, offices, and small apartments. Part of the building will be two stories and the balance three.

BUYS WEST SIDE GARAGE SITE.

The R. F. Dempsey Teaming company has bought the southeast corner of lake and Leavitt, 58x112, for a reported $32,000 from G. Kehl & Sons, who are erecting a one story garage for the buyer. Alex Friend & Co. were brokers.

Immel State Bank Building



Architect Clarence Hatzfeld designed the above new building for the Immel State bank to be erected at California, Belmont, and Elston, in the heart of what was once called Avondale. It'll have an exterior of Bedford stone, with granite base, and will be of semi-fireproof construction. The total investment, it is claimed, will be $300,000. In addition to large banking quarters there'll be several stores on the first floor. The entire upper floor will be offices. Completion date is set for the latter part of the year. John Immel is president of the bank, now on California, near Belmont.

KELLOGG-MACKAY CO. TO BUILD IN CENTRAL MANUFACTURING DIST.

Three new buildings are announced for the central manufacturing district, the trustees of which are to build for the Kellogg-Mackay company, makers of boilers, radiators, heating and plumbing supplies, now at 419 West 18th.

The trustees of the district have sold the company approximately 70,000 square feet of land on the south side of West 37th place, at Loomis place and the river.

S. Scott Joy has drawn plans for a $310,000 four story factory and warehouse, to be of brick and concrete construction, with about 97,000 square feet of floor area and platform space.

The second building will be of brick and steel construction and will be used as a pipe shed. It'll adjoin the main building on the east. The third structure will be erected east of the pipe shed and will be a one story brick building to be used as a pipe shop.

Subdivision News

Samuel Q. Goldman & Co. announce a new subdivision in Lake Bluff consisting of twenty-four lots on Hawthorne court, east of Sheridan road. All improvements are to be put in and it'll be restricted.

Irwin L. Fife, formerly sales manager with Krenn & Dato, now in business for himself under the firm name of Fife & Co., is opening a subdivision at Oakton and East Prairie.

[For other real estate news see preceding page.]

POLISH ALLIANCE TO HAVE COMPETITION FOR NEW BUILDING

The Polish National alliance of 1406 West Division announces a competition to select the architect for its new $800,000 eight story headquarters to be built at the northeast corner of Division and Dickson on a 96x116 site.

The competition will be conducted in the manner approved by the American Institute of Architects. Those wishing to compete must apply to R. C. Llewellyn, A. I. A., 38 South Dearborn, by June 3. Admitted competitors will be announced June 10. The competition will close Aug. 12. The program of the competition can be obtained from either Mr. Llewellyn or the Polish National alliance.

The building will contain an auditorium, several lodge halls, a library, complete plant for printing a daily newspaper, and shops and offices.

Radiant health requires that you fight Acid Decay at

THE DANGER LINE

THAT bright, happy smile of radiant health! How much it depends upon sound, beautiful teeth!

Medical and dental authorities state that the condition of the teeth and gums vitally affects the entire physical well-being. They estimate that fully fifty per cent of human illness can be prevented by keeping the mouth and teeth always clean and healthy!

Fight Acid Decay

Nearly all serious diseases of the gums, as well as much tooth decay, begin with acid conditions at The Danger Line—that tiny, V-shaped crevice formed by the rounded edges of the gums where they come into contact with the teeth.

When you eat, tiny food particles are pressed down under the gum edge. Your tooth-brush does not dislodge them. They remain in the mouth and ferment, forming acids which eat into your teeth. This is Acid Decay.

Such decay begins readily and spreads rapidly in the soft tooth structure at The Danger Line. Abscesses form at the roots of the teeth. The gums become infected and pyorrhea frequently develops. Poisons from abscesses and pyorrhea find their way into every part of the body, lowering the vitality and often causing rheumatism, heart-disease and other serious conditions.

Enlarged drawing of a tooth, showing how Acid Decay begins at The Danger Line and spreads under the gums. It causes infection. The gums recede. Pyorrhea and abscesses often develop.

You cannot keep your teeth sound and attractive, or enjoy perfect health, unless Acid Decay is stopped at The Danger Line.

Special care is necessary to prevent it

Simply "washing" your teeth with an ordinary dentifrice cannot prevent Acid Decay.

To accomplish this effectively, your dental cream must neutralize acids at the same time it cleans your teeth.

Squibb's Dental Cream does. It is made with Squibb's Milk of Magnesia—pleasantly flavored—prescribed for years as the safest and best product for counteracting acids in the mouth.

Brushing your teeth regularly with Squibb's Dental Cream accomplishes everything necessary to prevent Acid Decay at The Danger Line and elsewhere. It keeps the mouth acid-free. It aids in the removal of dental mucin from the teeth, polishing them beautifully. It allays the sensitiveness of acid-decayed teeth, is soothing to the gums and promotes a normal, healthy condition of the mouth.

You, and all your family, will prefer this thorough method of keeping the teeth sound and attractive. No other dentifrice combines the same advantages. Use Squibb's Dental Cream—made with Squibb's Milk of Magnesia. Your druggist can supply you.

SQUIBB'S DENTAL CREAM

Made with Squibb's Milk of Magnesia

Squibb's Milk of Magnesia

is one of the most popular as well as the blandest of alkalis. It owes its medicinal value chiefly to its property of counteracting acidity. Other products neutralize acids, but most of them are injurious to the tissues of the body.

Squibb's Milk of Magnesia, however, is the one ideal antacid as, being insoluble; it is but weakly active until it comes into contact with an acid. This releases its strength in just sufficient quantity to counteract the acid present.

MRS. EDWARD B. McLEAN, wife of the Washington publisher, has been impressively portrayed by Laszlo, the Hungarian artist. In this painting she is shown wearing the Hope diamond, of widely known and somewhat sinister history—a jewel which is now one of the proudest possessions of the family. Mrs. McLean, before her marriage, was Miss Evelyn Walsh, daughter of the late Thomas F. Walsh, the mining magnate. (Photograph copyright by Underwood & Underwood.)

As a woman
I help other women

By ELLEN J. BUCKLAND, Graduate Nurse

Bringing charm, immaculacy, and peace of mind in solving woman's oldest hygienic problem—the NEW, scientific way

This is to offer you a book telling of a new way in personal hygiene. A book that thousands of women have read, and found peace of mind, exquisiteness and better health as a result. Simply write for it.

Modern science has found a better way—safer, less embarrassing, more hygienic — than the old-time "sanitary pad."

It is called KOTEX. Nurses in war time France first discovered it. Now 8 in 10 women in the better walks of life use it. The bad habit of makeshift methods is rapidly being ended.

60% of many ills common to women, according to numerous authorities, are due to improper, old methods. That's why doctors so strongly urge KOTEX.

What it does

KOTEX is a newly discovered material. Made of Cellucotton, it is far more absorbent than ordinary cotton. It absorbs 16 times its own weight in moisture.

It is hygienically treated. Hence does not invite dangerous germ life to increase and multiply — the cause of many ailments.

No trouble disposing of

It is as easily disposed of as a piece of tissue—simply discard it. No embarrassment, no difficulty.

Women who seek daintiness, peace of mind, exquisiteness and safety under all circumstances, use it. Once you do, no other method will ever satisfy. And millions will tell you this.

Easy to get it

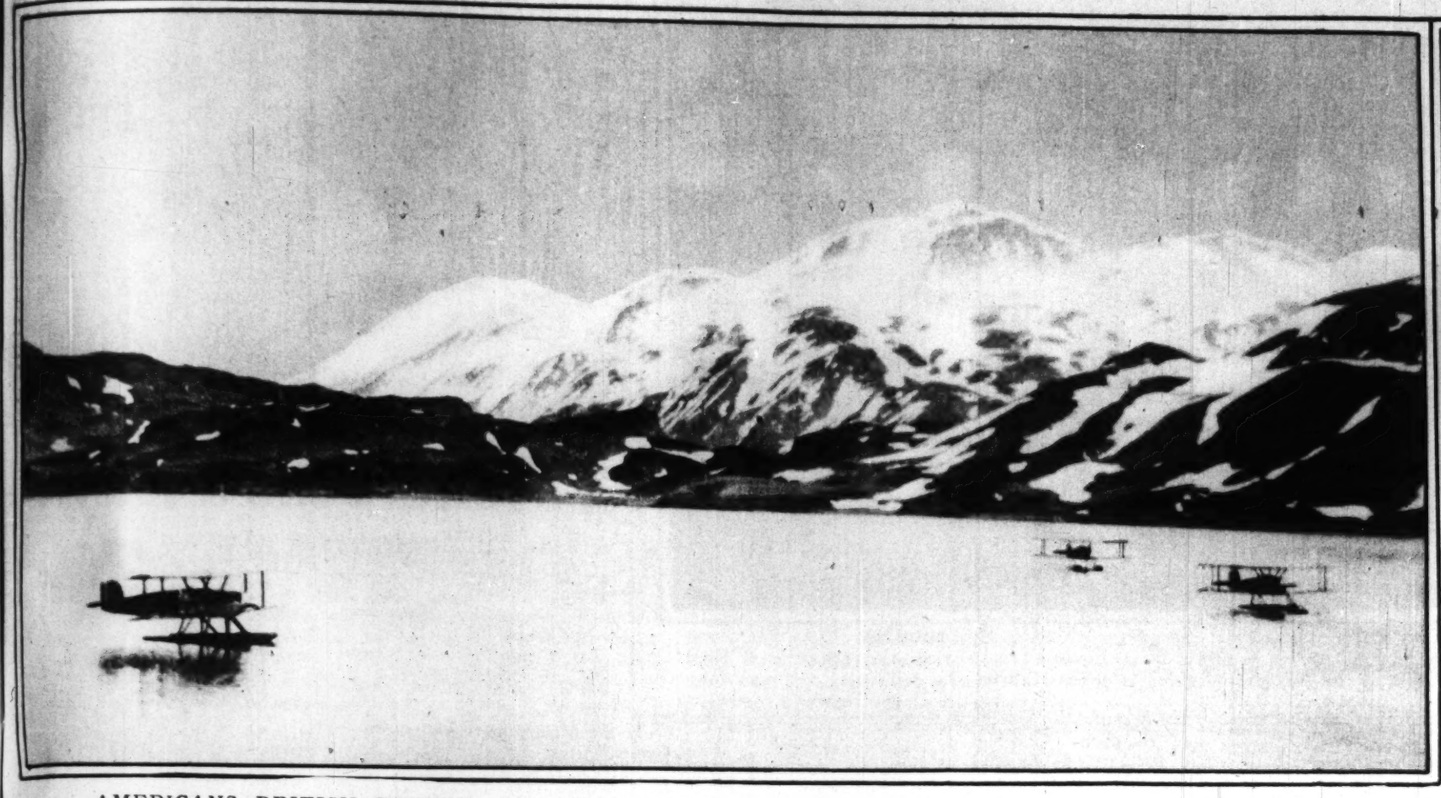
AROUND the WORLD AIR RACE!



AMERICANS, BRITISH, FRENCH, AND PORTUGUESE have set forth on a memorable race to be the first flyers to circle the earth. Not all of them admit that they are actually in competition, but the cruises, by various routes, have developed a spirited rivalry. Here are three of the four American planes at Captain's Bay, Unalaska, a little island of the Aleutian group that projects into the north Pacific. Maj. Martin, the American flight commander, was lost shortly before this picture was taken.

THIS FRENCH ACE, Lieut. Pelletier Doisy, hopped off from Paris with the announced intention of flying only to Tokio. He made remarkable speed to Calcutta, covering the 6,200 miles in fifty-two hours' flying time. (Photograph from Keystone)

THE BRITISH FLYERS—Squadron Leader A. Stuart Maclaren, at the right; J. Plenderleigh, pilot, in the center, and Sergt. Andrews, mechanic, in the cockpits of their huge amphibian plane, the Vulture. Note the interesting contrasts of construction glimpsed in this picture and that of Lieut. Smith's American ship, the Chicago. The British flight is an unofficial venture, but was launched frankly as an effort to compete with the American cruise.
(Photograph from Pacific & Atlantic.)

LOST—This is the last picture of Maj. Frederick L. Martin to be taken before his plane disappeared along the Alaskan peninsula after leaving Chignik. There was a long wait, and then the other American flyers continued on their way without their commander.

THE START OF THE BRITISH FLIGHT from Southampton, England, about a week after the American expedition hopped off. These airmen flew across France and the Mediterranean to Cairo, proceeded thence to Bagdad, and had penetrated southern Asia as far as Pailu when their engine broke down and they were compelled to wait for another. (Photograph from Pacific & Atlantic.)

SIX MILLION TONS OF COAL ARE SAVED EACH YEAR by use of the mighty energy generated in this building. It is the power house of the $28,000,000 hydroelectric plant at the Keokuk dam, in Iowa. Its 200,000 horse power is used over a wide region, the transmission lines extending as far as St. Louis. The Keokuk dam, which harnesses the flow of the Mississippi river, is seven-eighths of a mile long and was completed in 1913.

30 Minutes from Basin to Coiffure

In 10 minutes hair is washed. In 15 minutes more hair is dry and ready to do up perfectly in the style most becoming to you.

An Entirely New Way to Shampoo

ELIMINATES THE RINSING EVIL

Used 20 years privately, now tendered American women on a Free-Test Offer

This is to tell progressive women about a radically new shampoo. And to offer a test free.

Rinsing is eliminated. It isn't necessary with this new method. Hair and scalp are cleansed a new way. And better than the old way.

10 minutes washes your hair. 15 minutes more, and your hair is thoroughly dry and ready to do up.

Hair is perfectly manageable after washing this new way. Doesn't "fly" or shift about. Every strand stays in place.

30 minutes before going to a party you can shampoo your hair and have a perfect coiffure.

Sounds Incredible, We Know

Many women will doubt all this, we know. It seems so impossible. Many will question the non-rinsing idea. So we say: "Don't accept our word for a thing. See for yourself. Accept a trial bottle free and let your own hair tell you the story."

How It Works

You take four teaspoonfuls of Cleero and mix it with a glass of warm water. Then apply to your hair, working it in with the fingers. Immediately it makes a snow-white foam. (Not the usual alkaline lather.)

The action of this foam loosens the dirt, dust, hardened scalp oil, etc., from the scalp and hair. The accumulations, dissolved in the foam, turn it gray. Then you simply wipe off the foam with your hands or with a towel.

You repeat the application two or three times, until the lather remains pure white. That means your scalp and hair are absolutely clean.

No Rinsing Necessary

To the benefit of your hair, no rinsing is necessary. For Cleero contains no alkaline soap or other harmful ingredients to be washed out of your hair. Nothing to harm your hair or to make it gummy.

The volatile action of Cleero takes the place of rinsing.

Every bit of dust, grease and dandruff is loosened from scalp and hair and rolled to the top of the foam. When you wipe off the foam, all the dirt comes with it.

This seems strange, we realize. But one trial of Cleero will convince you. Your scalp is whiter than you've ever seen. And your hair as clean, sweet and fresh as spring flowers.

Note the Difference in Your Hair

Cleero is, oh, so convenient! Hair shampooed in 10 minutes. Perfectly dry and ready for dressing in 15 minutes more.

But, more important, Cleero is beneficial to your hair. After a Cleero shampoo your hair gleams with new life and sparkles with new lustre.

A big reason for this is that you don't rinse with Cleero.

Rinsing has been the evil in shampooing because of the alkali and other minerals in water. Alkali and other minerals in water devitalize the hair, make it dull and brittle. It has exactly the same effect as an alkaline soap shampoo.

Cleero eliminates the harmful rinsing.

20 Years in Use

Cleero is comparatively new to America. But the formula has been in use nearly a quarter century in Europe by the fashionable hairdressers. So its merit is already established. Anyone may accept it with full confidence.

Only recently offered the American public, Cleero already has wide vogue. It may be had at almost any toilet counter. But lest there be any doubt as to its extraordinary qualities, we offer 5,000 test bottles free.

If only out of curiosity, make a test of this unique shampoo. See the convenience of it, and the wonderful difference in your hair.

The coupon brings you a trial bottle, free and postpaid. Clip it now lest you forget.

How film ruins teeth

Film is the great tooth enemy—that viscous film you feel. It clings to teeth. No ordinary tooth paste effectively combats it.

Soon that clinging film discolors, then forms dingy coats. That is why your teeth lose luster.

Film also holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay. Germs breed by millions in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

Under old methods, hardly one in fifty escapes these troubles caused by film.

Dental science has now found two ways to fight film. One disintegrates the film at all stages of formation. One removes it without harmful scouring.

Able authorities have proved these methods effective. A new-type tooth paste has been created to apply them daily. The name is Pepsodent.

Leading dentists the world over began to advise it. Now careful people of some 50 nations employ it every day.

Invisible effects

Pepsodent brings amazing results which all who use can see. But its hidden results mean a new dental era.

It multiplies the alkalinity of the saliva, also its starch digestant. They are there to neutralize mouth acids and digest starch deposits on teeth.

Old-time tooth pastes brought the opposite results. This new way corrects their mistakes. Every careful person should discover what it means.

Protect the Enamel

Pepsodent disintegrates the film, then removes it with an agent far softer than enamel. Never use a film combatant which contains harsh grit.

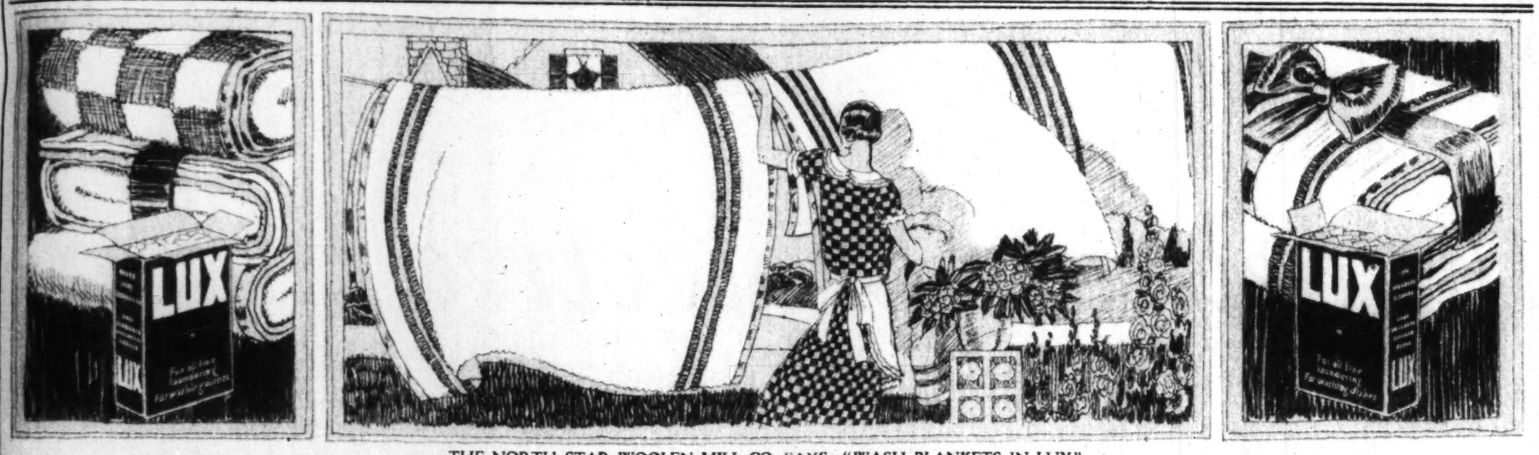
ARCHBISHOP CIEPLAK, SAVED BY BRITAIN, RETURNS TO WARSAW—There was a great demonstration when the Polish prelate arrived at his home from Russia, where he had been in a Bolshevist prison for more than a year. A crowd of 100,000 persons accorded him a tremendous welcome and fought for the honor of drawing his carriage from the railway station. He was condemned to death in 1923 with other Roman Catholic dignitaries in Moscow, but the entire Christian world was aroused by the sentence and at the request of the English authorities he was reprieved. The archbishop is in the center of the picture, weeping. (Photograph copyright by Pacific & Atlantic.)



THE NORTH STAR WOOLEN MILL CO. SAYS: "WASH BLANKETS IN LUX"

This is the very month to wash blankets

To keep them unshrunken · · soft – fluffy –wash them this way

IT'S blanket washing time all over the country. No matter how carefully they've been used, blankets need a good thorough laundering before they're put away, to keep the moths out. It's only soiled places that attract moths — clean blankets are practically moth-proof.

Once it was a real undertaking to wash them — an undertaking that you dreaded because the results were so uncertain. You were careful, painstaking, but even so your blankets would shrink, get stiff and board-like.

Lux has changed all this. You can wash your blankets—big, handsome, all-wool ones, light weight wool and cotton, wool nap—every kind you have—in pure Lux lather without fear of their shrinking or matting.

Ordinary soap or a harsh soap chip takes the life out of any blanket, shrinks it almost beyond recognition. A single careless washing with such soap has been known to make a blanket shrink eighteen inches — a full half-yard!

Lux is pure and mild—entirely free from any ingredient that could harm delicate woolen fibres.

It keeps your blankets like new. It won't shrink or mat them—won't make them stiff and scratchy. Lux will not yellow your blankets. Year after year you can wash them in these pure bland flakes and keep them soft, cozy and fluffy. Whatever you can trust to pure water alone you can trust to Lux. Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

Great fabric manufacturers endorse Lux

The North Star Woolen Mill Co., maker of the finest blankets in America, says, "The tests and experiments we have made have demonstrated that Lux is an ideal product for washing blankets."

The maker of Ascher's Knit Goods, Carter's Knit Underwear, the Fleisher Yarns, recommend Lux for the safe laundering of anything containing wool.

How to Wash Your Blankets

A rich, live suds throughout the entire process is essential in the washing of blankets. To obtain this, use 2 tablespoonfuls of Lux to every gallon of water used in the washing.

Dissolve Lux thoroughly in very hot water, whisking it into a thick lather. Add cold water until lukewarm. Put the blanket into the rich suds, souse it up and down and squeeze the suds through the entire blanket.

If the suds die down, too much water has been used in cooling the solution, and more dissolved Lux should be added to restore the suds.

Take care to press the suds through the very soiled spots, but be sure never to rub the blankets. Rinse in three or more, if necessary, lukewarm waters, of the same temperature as the suds.

Drying: It makes blankets fluffier to let them drip dry. If this is not convenient, run through a loose wringer. Never twist them. To avoid stretching and dragging hang the blanket double, and if possible lengthwise, over the line and pin it at frequent intervals.

5 Special Points on Blanket Washing

Extremes of heat and cold shrink wool so that it is just as important to maintain a moderate and even temperature in drying blankets as in washing them. In warm weather dry blankets out of doors in a shady place where they will not flap and blow in the wind. In cold or windy weather dry them indoors. Do not brush.

Rubbing: Blankets are given a nap to make them soft and fluffy and to give them warmth. They should, therefore, never be rubbed as this will remove some of the nap and will also felt and shrink them.

Ribbon bindings will not pucker if stretched taut several times while the blanket is drying, and pressed lightly with a warm iron after the blanket is dry.

Baby's knitted blankets and afghans: For washing follow directions for blankets. Never hang knitted things but spread them on a bath towel to dry, and pull into shape — according to measurements made before the article was washed.

Summer blankets are sometimes only partly wool, but should be washed as if they were all wool.

WOOL IS AS SENSITIVE AS A BABY'S SKIN

Wool is more sensitive than any other fabric and requires more careful laundering. The wool fibre is a delicate animal fibre. It is made up of tiny horny scales which overlap very much like the scales of a fish.

Rubbing cake soap on a woolen garment or rubbing the garment to get the dirt out makes these scale-like fibres interlock, or draw up and shrink. A soap or soap flake at all harsh will also shrink wool as well as coarsen and yellow it.

IMPORTANT USES FOR LUX

In addition to the well-known uses recommended by great fabric manufacturers — silks — woolens — fine cottons and linens — try Lux for

Family Laundry	Porcelain
Dishes	Rugs
Linoleum	Automobiles

Careless washing, using harsh soap, has been known to shrink a blanket eighteen inches—a full half-yard—in a single washing.

They will not tolerate the treacherous shadows, the tiny lines of fatigue, late hours mean to an improperly cared for skin.

EVERY NIGHT . . . the rejuvenating cleansing
EVERY MORNING . . . the delicate protective finish

THERE are a great many women who simply must be lovely. They are not satisfied to watch their once exquisite skin losing its freshness, its lustre, its fragile charm.

They know that the enemies of the skin must be fought every day if one is to keep a youthful complexion. Sun and wind and dust take a terrible toll in the coarsening and roughening of the skin, and clearness disappears if dust or powder is allowed to clog the pores.

They know, too, these lovely women, that late parties and post-midnight dancing will show the next day in tiny lines of fatigue around the mouth and eyes. They have found a little care, a few moments each day, a small enough price to pay for the clear bright beauty of a faultless complexion.

And these are the women who have turned to the Pond's method. It is based on the two principles of skin protection—Rejuvenating Cleansing and a Delicate Protective Finish—which Pond's Two famous Creams supply.

Famous beauties recommend this exquisite way of caring for the skin

Julia Hoyt and Mrs. Biddle Duke, selected by Neysa McMein as two of society's most famous beauties recommend the Pond's method as a perfect way of caring for the skin.

"Cleanliness," says Mrs. Hoyt, "is the first essential. A lovely skin is a matter of a little care every day and a few thoughtfully chosen toilet preparations. Select first a soft pure cream that melts on the face and goes into the pores to clear away all impurities." This is just what Pond's Cold Cream does.

"Then, of equal importance is the proper finish—a preparation that provides a soft fine surface on which the powder will go evenly and stay." For precisely this, Pond's Vanishing Cream is made.

Every night apply Pond's Cold Cream liberally on the face and neck. Rub it in gently with the tips of the fingers, or apply it on a piece of moistened cotton. The delicate cream works deep into the pores, ridding them of the excess oil, the dust and powder, that clog and cloud them. Take a soft cloth and wipe the cream gently off. You will gasp at the amount of dust and dirt that comes with it. How soft and smooth your skin feels now, how fresh and relaxed. A Pond's cleansing leaves the skin not only immaculate, but lustrous, supple, young.

In the morning—after dashing your face with cold water, rub in a little Pond's Vanishing Cream—just enough for the skin to absorb. How cool and rested your skin feels,—and notice how evenly the powder goes on. With Pond's Vanishing Cream as a foundation it will cling for hours.

When you are going out, after cleansing and before you powder, rub in a little Vanishing Cream. Instantly you see a clear fresh tone, a new delicacy of texture, and it affords your skin a protection it can get in no other way.

Most skins require a Pond's cleansing only once a day unless they have been subjected to severe exposure. After an afternoon of golf, motoring, or a train trip, be sure to use Pond's Cold Cream as soon as you come in—following it of course by Pond's Vanishing Cream before you powder.

Begin today to give your skin this exquisite cleansing and protection. Follow the example of the wise and charming women who will not permit their skins to lose their youth and freshness. Buy Pond's Two Creams today at any drug or department store, or send for generous samples. The Pond's Extract Company, New York City.

The society woman, the actress, the women who must be lovely, depend upon Pond's Two Creams for the Rejuvenating Cleansing and the Delicate Protective Finish which keeps their skin exquisite.

THE ULTRA-MODERNS

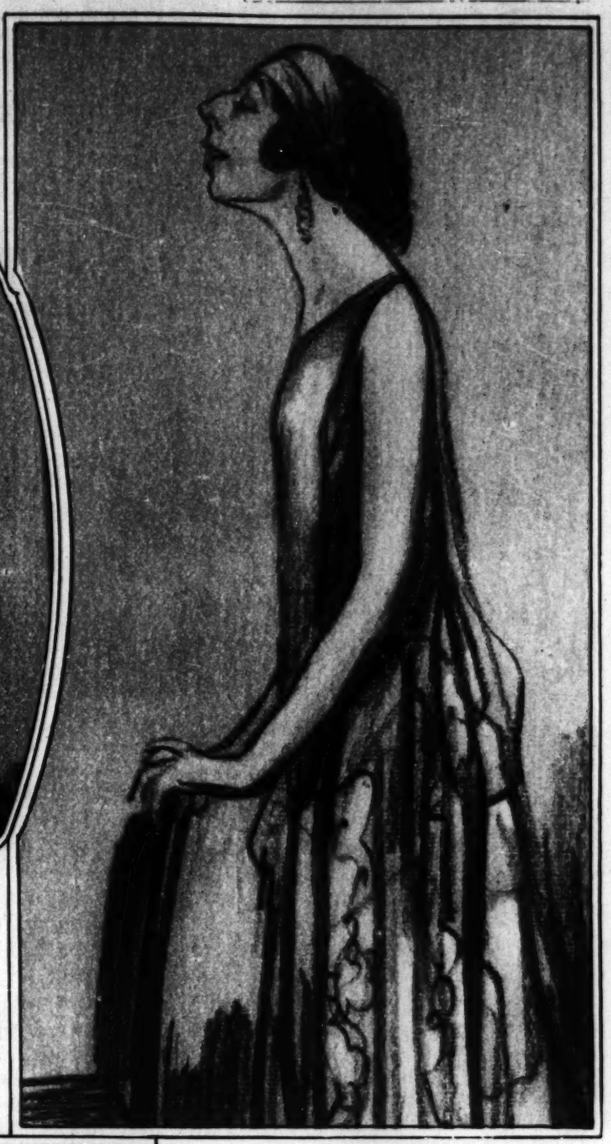
By W. E. HILL

Copyright, 1924, by The Chicago Tribune

"I wouldn't repeat that dream about the big man chasing you with a club if I were you, Aunt Mae." Aunts and mothers really ought to read up on psycho-analysis these days. They are constantly embarrassing the modern young lady with the most Freudian of dreams.

The modern book shop makes a specialty of modern first editions at ultra-modern prices. Miss Bitten, the very modern assistant, is recommending the latest suppressed book to a customer at twenty-seven-fifty only.

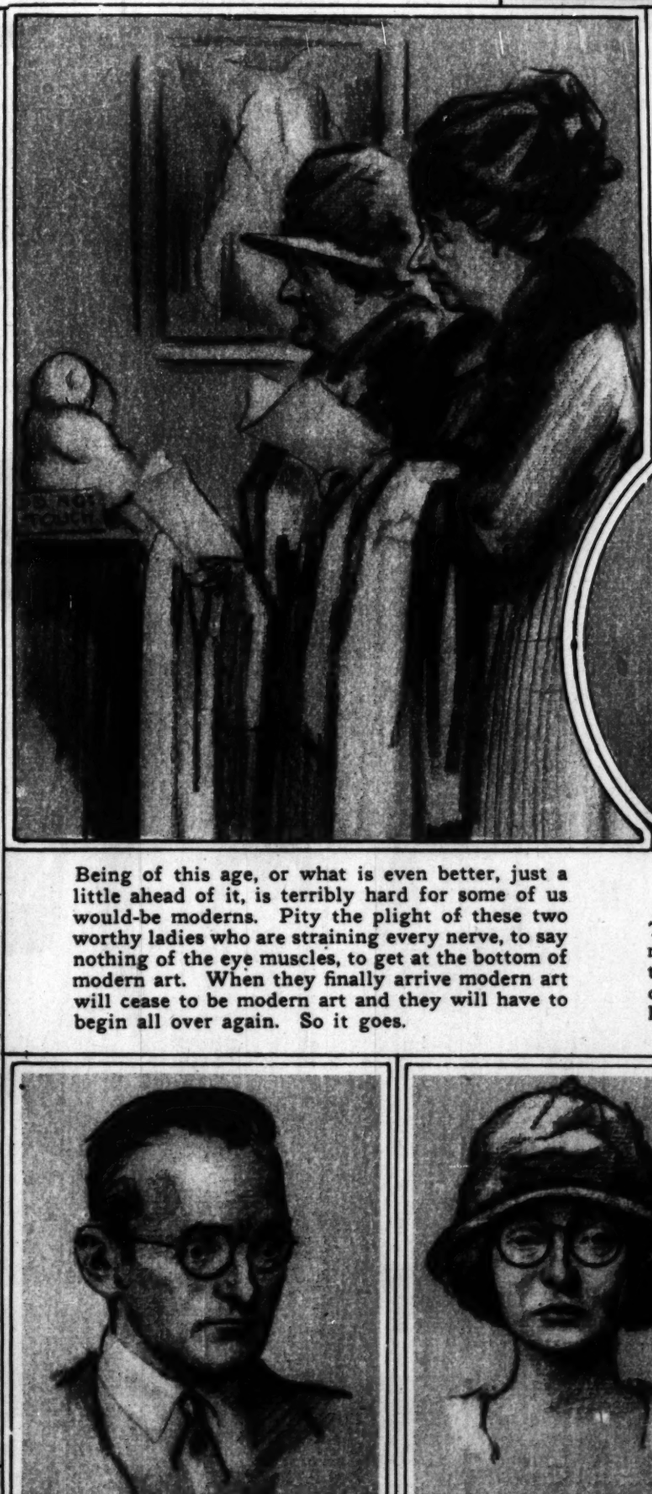
Mrs. Ronald Tuttle is pretty modern, yes siree. She believes absolutely in freedom of love for all people, provided, of course, that Ronald isn't a party to it.



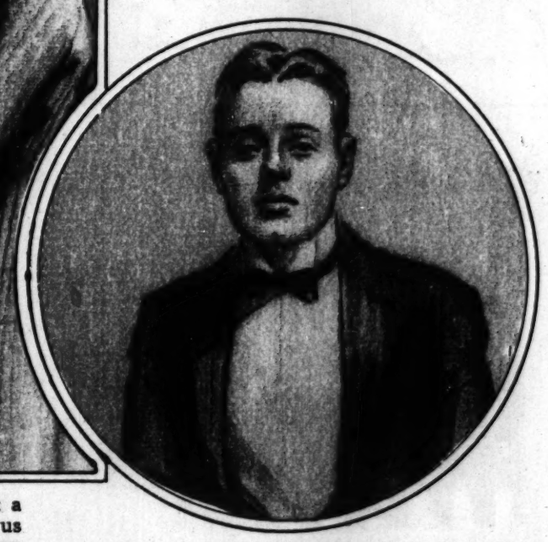
In the old days when asked to entertain the guests with a little song the lady with a voice got up after a great deal of coaxing and rendered "Sweet and Low," or maybe "Robin Adair," with "Cherry Red, Cherry Ripe," for an encore. Not so today. To begin with she doesn't need much urging. She ups and says, "I shall sing you a little thing of Villon's, which Shoenberg has set to music. It is about a young man in a village near Ghent, whose sweetheart said to him, 'My love, there seems to be very little distinction between the sexes these days.' Whereupon he left her and she died of a broken heart."

Some mammas are a bit skeptical about the ultra-modern young people one sees around nowadays, and they decide that Doris or Gladys shall grow up to be a nice sensible girl, not too modern.

This is an age of self expression, as any lovely girl between the ages of twenty-seven and eighty-seven who has an urge for the artistic will tell you—especially those girls who have been blighted by love. Next to affected tonsils, Rhythmic Dancing, or Rhythmic Self Expression (capitals, please), will best take their minds off themselves. This young lady is being rhythmic and self expressive in a dance depicting the seven deadly sins.



Being of this age, or what is even better, just a little ahead of it, is terribly hard for some of us would-be moderns. Pity the plight of these two worthy ladies who are straining every nerve, to say nothing of the eye muscles, to get at the bottom of modern art. When they finally arrive modern art will cease to be modern art and they will have to begin all over again. So it goes.



The young man who would achieve modernity must rail at the country, the public, and the times in general. "There IS no appreciation of art or literature in America today," says he bitterly. Maybe so.

Three ultra-moderns who manage to keep up with the times. The serious young man believes all governments should be abolished for twenty years. After that if there's anything left, all right. The young lady in the center is great on lectures. She hasn't missed a lecture on glands or birth control for ever so long. The somewhat stout lady is fond of taking "courses." Courses on Modern Art, Modern Government, Modern Food and Modern Poetry, she takes them all.

Seattle in your headquarters for that 1924 Pacific Northwest Vacation

Seattle, fascinating city on picturesque Puget Sound, offers incomparable vacation delights in a cool, evergreen playground of amazing scenic wonders, blessed with a mild, invigorating climate the year round.

Here you will find all the recreational advantages of an interesting, expanding, metropolitan Western city, whose one generation's growth to world city stature is an epoch in American enterprise. Seattle will surprise you and you will stay longer than you expect to.

The lure of Seattle's immediate out-of-doors and the witchery and diversity of its beauty cannot be told in words—woods and greenery, surf of the Pacific, inland seas, the lovely San Juan archipelago, majestic snow-clad and glacier girt mountains, mountain lakes, rushing streams, and tumbling waterfalls.

Get away from the summer heat. The Puget Sound region is green the summer through. It is unique in the absence of ground pests and poisonous reptiles, of cyclones and violent storms. It is famous for its cool, pure water everywhere.

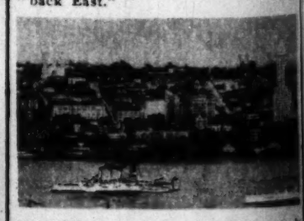
Enjoy cool, balmy days and cool refreshing nights always. The average June, July and August temperature in Seattle is 62 degrees. Sleep under blankets every night. Rainless days are the rule in this remarkable Summerland. There is radiant health here, for Seattle holds the world's record for the low annual mortality rate, both infant and adult.

A Wonderful Vacation Land

Nowhere else in the world on a June day can you bathe in the sea at noontime, and five hours later 5700 feet up on the side of Mount Rainier, coast on a glacial system exceeding the combined glaciers in Switzerland. The diversity of attractions is surprising.

Adjoining the snow fields of Mount Rainier are hundreds of acres of brilliant hued Alpine blossoms—daisies, anemones, geraniums, columbine and larkspur, among which one wades knee deep—the richest subalpine garden ever found. John Muir called Rainier "a perfect floral elysium."

Come to new scenes and new joys. This surpassing vacation land is your heritage as well as ours. To you of the Middle West this will prove an alluring wonderland. Every day something new to see and to do—motoring over paved roads, golfing, fishing, yachting, bridle paths, steamer trips, mountain climbing, surf bathing. All these joys are but a few hours from your hotel in Seattle, which offers every accommodation and the city attractions you know "back East."



No other vacation land affords so much of interest and recreation at so modest an expense. You will be surprised how little it costs. Our Hospitality Bureau will help you plan your vacation.

Seattle, in the "Charmed Land," is only 79 hours from Chicago. See your ticket agent about the low summer fare of $86.00 from Chicago to Seattle and return, on sale daily until September 30—a choice of routes returning. They are real "bargain fares."

Travelers to any other part of the Pacific Coast should come via Seattle for there are liberal stopover privileges on both round-trip and one-way tickets.

If you go to Japan, China, the Philippines, Honolulu or Alaska sail from Seattle, the gateway to Alaska and the Orient.

Decide early, decide now for the Pacific Northwest vacation in 1924 with Seattle as your headquarters. It's America's Supreme Vacation Land.

AMERICA'S NEW HALL of FAME for SCIENCE

(Photographs copyright by the National Academy of Sciences.)

THIRTY-SEVEN FIGURES IN BAS RELIEF, comprised in six bronze tablets, march across the front of the new Academy Research building in Washington, typifying the builders' choice as to the men who have contributed most to the development of organized knowledge. Here are six of the great names of the past, ranging in time from Thales of Miletus (600 B. C.) to Galileo (1564-1642).

ILLUMINATING SYMBOLISM tells a concise story in each panel, as in these figures of Hippocrates, the Greek "father of medicine"; Aristotle, who founded natural history as a science; Archimedes, the Greek scientist; Nicholaus Copernicus, Polish astronomer; Andreas Vesalius, Belgian anatomist, and William Harvey, Englishman, who discovered the circulation of the blood.

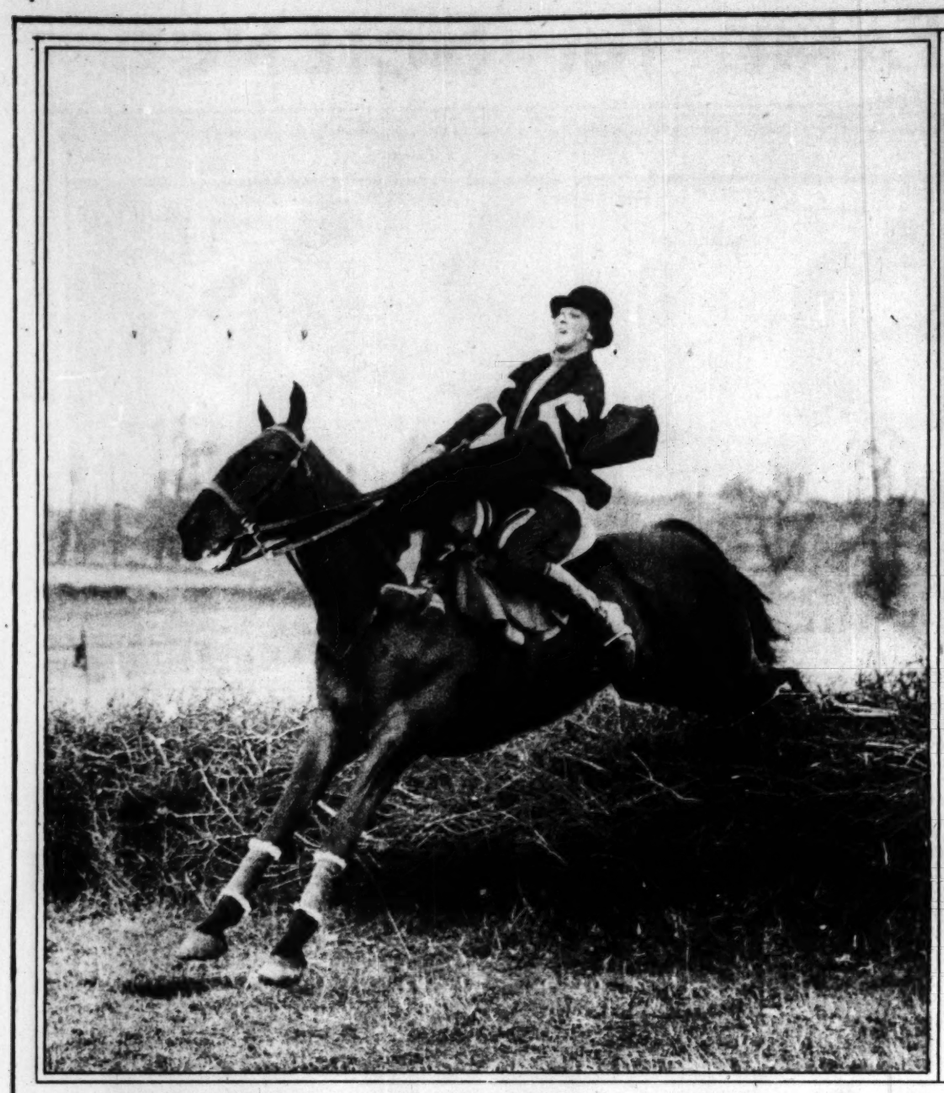
IN THIS PANEL are Baron Friedrich von Humboldt (1769-1859), German philosopher and traveler; John Dalton (1766-1844), who originated the atomic theory of matter; Jean Baptiste de Lamarck, (1744-1829), Darwin's predecessor in formulating a theory of evolution; James Watt (1736-1819), inventor of the condensing steam engine; Franklin, American patriot and physicist, and Huygens, Dutch astronomer.

THIS GROUP is headed by Rene Descartes, who invented analytic geometry and made it hard for us in high school. Behind him come Sir Isaac Newton, discoverer of the law of gravitation; Carolus Linnaeus, Swedish botanist; Anton Lavoisier, "father of scientific chemistry"; Pierre Laplace, formulator of the nebular hypothesis; Baron Cuvier, French naturalist, and Gauss, the German mathematician.

ONLY TWO AMERICANS are included in the distinguished company—Franklin and Josiah Willard Gibbs (1839-1903), the second figure in this panel. Gibbs was a mathematician and physicist of Yale, and founded modern physical chemistry. Sir Francis Galton, at the left, is famous for having introduced the eugenics movement and the identification of criminals by the use of finger prints.

AND HERE, FINALLY, are Sadi Carnot (1796-1832), the French engineer and physicist; Claude Bernard (1813-1878), French physiologist; James Prescott Joule (1818-1889), British physicist; Louis Pasteur (1822-1895), founder of the science of bacteriology; Mendel, the Austrian priest who discovered the Mendel law of inheritance, and James Clerk Maxwell, Scottish physicist.

THE ACADEMY RESEARCH BUILDING was dedicated last month with impressive ceremonies in which President Coolidge had a leading part. It is a stately structure of marble, facing the Lincoln Memorial across the wide vista of the Mall in the national capital, and was built at a cost of $1,250,000 as a national focus of science and research and the home of the National Academy of Sciences and the National Research council. Many novel exhibits of keen popular interest—some of them engagingly described by James O'Donnell Bennett in The Tribune at the time of the dedication—are included in its equipment. The sculptural work is by Lee Lawrie.



A TITLED HORSEWOMAN—The Countess of St. Germans takes a barrier in spirited fashion in the ladies' race of the Tedworth Hunt steeplechase at Penton, England. Despite her accomplishments as a rider—or perhaps because of them—she has not abandoned the time-honored institution of the side-saddle.

Columbia
NEW PROCESS RECORDS

"The piano is one of the most difficult of all instruments to reproduce on a phonograph—but Columbia New Process Records are beautifully true. I am delighted with your recording of my playing."
Mischa Levitzki

Levitzki says: "I am delighted with your recording of my playing"

WORDS like these from Levitzki, who is one of the few great pianists of the times, are a wonderful tribute to Columbia New Process Records. Levitzki has put his finger on one of the greatest problems of phonograph recording and reproducing. The piano is the most difficult of all musical instruments to reproduce. Yet when you listen to Levitzki play the Hungarian Rhapsody No. 6 on Columbia Record A-6232, you will be astounded with the perfect shading, the richness and glorious resonance of tone. Never before has there been such a wonderful piano record made. To own it is to have a treasure.

The perfection with which Columbia New Process Records reproduce the piano is an index of their superiority in every class of music. And the secret of this matchless reproduction is in the new surfacing material—which eliminates needle noise and the scratching, filing sounds that mar your enjoyment of ordinary records.

Convince yourself to-day of the purity and fidelity of tone of Columbia New Process Records by hearing Levitzki's records, also these beautiful new ones by famous artists—

Largo (Handel) / Adagio (Haydn)	Cello Solos. Pablo Casals. 68061 D	12-inch, $2.00
In Old Madrid. / The Garden of Sleep.	Baritone Solos. Louis Graveure. 65004 D	12-inch, $1.50

Let this simple food bring back your health

"I KNEW my headaches and unwholesome complexion were caused by constipation. To take frequent cathartics was my regular program and even by doing this I was tired and dopy. 'I like what yeast does for me' said one of my customers and asked if I had ever tried it. I acted on this suggestion and began to drink yeast in milk regularly. Soon people began to comment on how well I was looking—my husband said I grew younger—the mirror told me my complexion and eyes were clear and bright. Cathartics are now a thing of the past."
(A letter from Mrs. Mabelle Conomikes of Marathon, N. Y.)

THESE remarkable reports are typical of thousands of similar tributes to Fleischmann's Yeast.

There is nothing mysterious about its action. It is not a "cure-all," not a medicine in any sense. But when the body is choked with the poisons of constipation—or when its vitality is low so that skin, stomach, and the general health are affected—this simple, natural food achieves literally amazing results.

Concentrated in every cake of Fleischmann's Yeast are millions of tiny yeast-plants, alive and active. At once they go to work—invigorating the whole system, clearing the skin, aiding digestion, strengthening the intestinal muscles and making them healthy and active. Health is yours once more.

"I WATCHED her crumble the crisp cake into the milk. We drifted into conversation. She sang of the magic of Fleischmann's Yeast. Many months before, her doctor had recommended it and she confessed she owed the clearness of her complexion to its use.

"I was persuaded to try the yeast in milk, and prepared to swallow an obnoxious dose. I was pleasantly surprised. It proved a delightfully palatable drink.

"Fleischmann's Yeast waged a successful battle against the canker sores, dried up the existing ones and cured the stomach condition which was causing them. I faced my winter's work with enthusiasm, and came through triumphant."
(Extract from a letter of Miss Grace S. Baumann of Philadelphia)

"FIVE years ago I had a serious breakdown due to strenuous war work, irregular food, loss of sleep, etc. I was a physical and nervous wreck. Then I saw Fleischmann's Yeast cakes advertised for loss of strength and energy and decided to try them. I started with four a day taken regularly with my meals. I liked the taste. In a short time my headaches disappeared, I slept better, my bowels functioned regularly, my flesh took on a healthy appearance. In a few months I felt like a new woman."
(A letter from Mrs. Edith Beamer of Detroit)

"I AM office manager for a large mercantile corporation. Two years ago I began to develop 'nerves,' stomach trouble, insomnia, and worst of all to me, an irritable disposition towards those under me. Chatting with a friend I spoke of always feeling so rotten that life was hardly worth living. My friend urged me to try Fleischmann's Yeast, attributing his own excellent health to its daily use. At the end of a week I was eating it with a relish, and feeling a great deal improved. Now a day never passes that I don't eat at least three cakes—using them as a between-meal snack—with the result that I am in the best of health with an eager zest for my work."
(Extract from letter of Mr. G. A. Dempsey of Winnipeg, Canada)

Dissolve one cake in a glass of water (just hot enough to drink)

—before breakfast and at bedtime. Fleischmann's Yeast, when taken this way, is especially effective in overcoming or preventing constipation.

Or eat 2 or 3 cakes a day—spread on bread or crackers—dissolved in fruit juices or milk—or eat it plain.

Fleischmann's Yeast comes only in the tinfoil package—it cannot be purchased in tablet form. All grocers have it. Start eating it today! A few days' supply will keep as well in your ice box as in the grocer's. Write us for further information or let us send you a free copy of our latest booklet on Yeast for Health. Address: Health Research Dept. 587, The Fleischmann Company, 701 Washington St., New York.

"TWO years ago I was a sufferer from an affliction of every kind of boil imaginable. At one time I had nine. Imagine playing football with a great boil on the back of your hand, or attending a dance with one right beside your nose.

"I gave up candy and pastry—but the boils continued. Then a friend—you bet he was a friend—suggested Fleischmann's Yeast. I tried it dubiously, but it did the trick! The boils ceased. Since that time I have never gone without my occasional cake of Fleischmann's Yeast."
(A letter from Charles F. Weiler of Flemington, N. J.)

OH YOU KIDD!

OH BOY! IF I COULD ONLY HAVE REMAINED ASLEEP ANOTHER MINUTE I WOULD HAVE BEEN A RICH MAN- I DREAMED I DISCOVERED OLD CAPTAIN KIDD'S TREASURE BURIED IN MY YARD-

I NEVER HAD SUCH A REALISTIC DREAM IN ALL MY LIFE- I CAN STILL SEE THE BARS OF VIRGIN GOLD PILED UP LIKE KINDLING WOOD- THERE WAS ENOUGH GOLD IN THAT PILE TO MAKE A GUY RICH BEYOND THE DREAMS OF AVARICE-

I JUST CAN'T GET THAT GOLDEN DREAM OUT OF MY HEAD- I SUPPOSE IT'S NOT TRUE BUT THEN YOU NEVER CAN TELL- IT'S A STRANGE WORLD- I KNOW A LOT OF SMART PEOPLE WHO BELIEVE IN DREAMS- THERE MIGHT BE MORE IN THIS OCCULT STUFF THAN WE THINK-

EVEN IF I DON'T FIND THE GOLD THE EXERCISE WILL DO ME GOOD- EVERYONE WILL THINK I AM MAKING A GARDEN- AND IF I DO FIND THE BURIED INGOTS, OH BOY! I'LL BE SITTING ON TOP OF THE WORLD WITH THE MINT FOR A FOOT-STOOL-

I'LL JUST GO OVER THIS YARD IN A SYSTEMATIC MANNER- IF I FIND THE GOLD I'LL DESERVE IT- IF I DON'T FIND IT I'LL HAVE THE SATISFACTION OF KNOWING I DID MY BEST-

SOME PEOPLE LAUGH AT DREAMS BUT IF IT WERE NOT FOR THE DREAMERS AND THE IMPOSSIBLE DREAMS THEY'VE MADE COME TRUE A FELLOW WOULD HAVE TO CLIMB A TREE WHEN HE WENT HOME TO DINE OFF OF COCOA-NUTS-

NO MATTER HOW MUCH MONEY I FIND I'VE EARNED IT BY THE SWEAT OF MY BROW- IF I WAS DIGGING STRAIGHT DOWN I'D BE IN CHINA TWO HOURS AGO-

OF COURSE I KNEW THERE WAS NOTHING TO THAT DREAM STUFF- I DON'T BELIEVE IN SUCH SILLY NONSENSE- BUT WHEN A LITTLE WORK ON MY PART MEANS A GARDEN OF ROSES YOU DON'T SEE ME SITTING IN THE SHADE WAITING FOR A FAIRY GODMOTHER TO DO MY SPADING.

SOME PEOPLE BELIEVE IN HORSE-SHOES, BLACK CATS, WITCHES' DREAMS AND ALL KINDS OF FOOLISH SUPERSTITIONS - BUT THAT STUFF IS A LOT OF APPLESAUCE - GOSH! I STRUCK SOMETHING - MAYBE IT'S THE TREASURE-

HURRAH! I'VE FOUND IT- LOOK AT THAT BAR OF GOLD LYING IN ITS LITTLE NEST FOR A COUPLE OF HUNDRED YEARS SO ANDREW CROESUS GUMP COULD COME ALONG AND PLUCK IT FROM ITS RESTING PLACE-

OH MIN!

BRUNNER

THE TEENIE WEENIES

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

THE WORLD'S SMALLEST PEOPLE.

BY WM. DONAHEY.

The Teenie Weenies used a great deal of corn, as much as eight or ten grains a week. The Cook would pound a grain in a hollowed-out pebble until it was fine flour, then he would make the flour into griddle cakes nearly as big as the head of a small tack, and there were few Teenie Weenies that couldn't eat at least five of them. Corn bread was a favorite dish with the little folks, so you see eight or ten grains were quickly used up.

One morning the General sent Gogo over to buy eight grains from Jake, a stingy old mouse who lived under a barn and sold corn to the little folks. Gogo bought the eight grains of corn for a piece of cheese, and putting the corn in a tiny bag he started home, but he hadn't gone far when the bag burst, spilling the corn onto the ground.

There was nothing to do but secure another bag, so the little fellow trotted off for one, but when he came back he was much concerned to see a hen calmly eating the corn.

"Hey, dar, yo' old, good fo' nothin' hen," shouted the little colored chap, "what yo' all mean by eatin' mah co'n?"

"Finders keepers, losers weepers," chuckled the hen as she gobbled up the last grain. "Do you think I am going to let good corn lie here and go to seed. Not by the great blue pin feather; not me." And she wiped her beak on the ground in a most satisfied way.

Several of the Teenie Weenies who had gathered about were astonished at the hen's impudence, and Gogo was fairly choking with anger.

"Lawsy me, but I wish I was a big folks and I suttenly would get even wid yo'," he shouted. "I'd, I'd eat yo', that's what I'd do. I'd take a large piece of white meat."

It was plain to see the hen was angry, for her comb turned a deep purple and her eyes flashed, but she kept her temper.

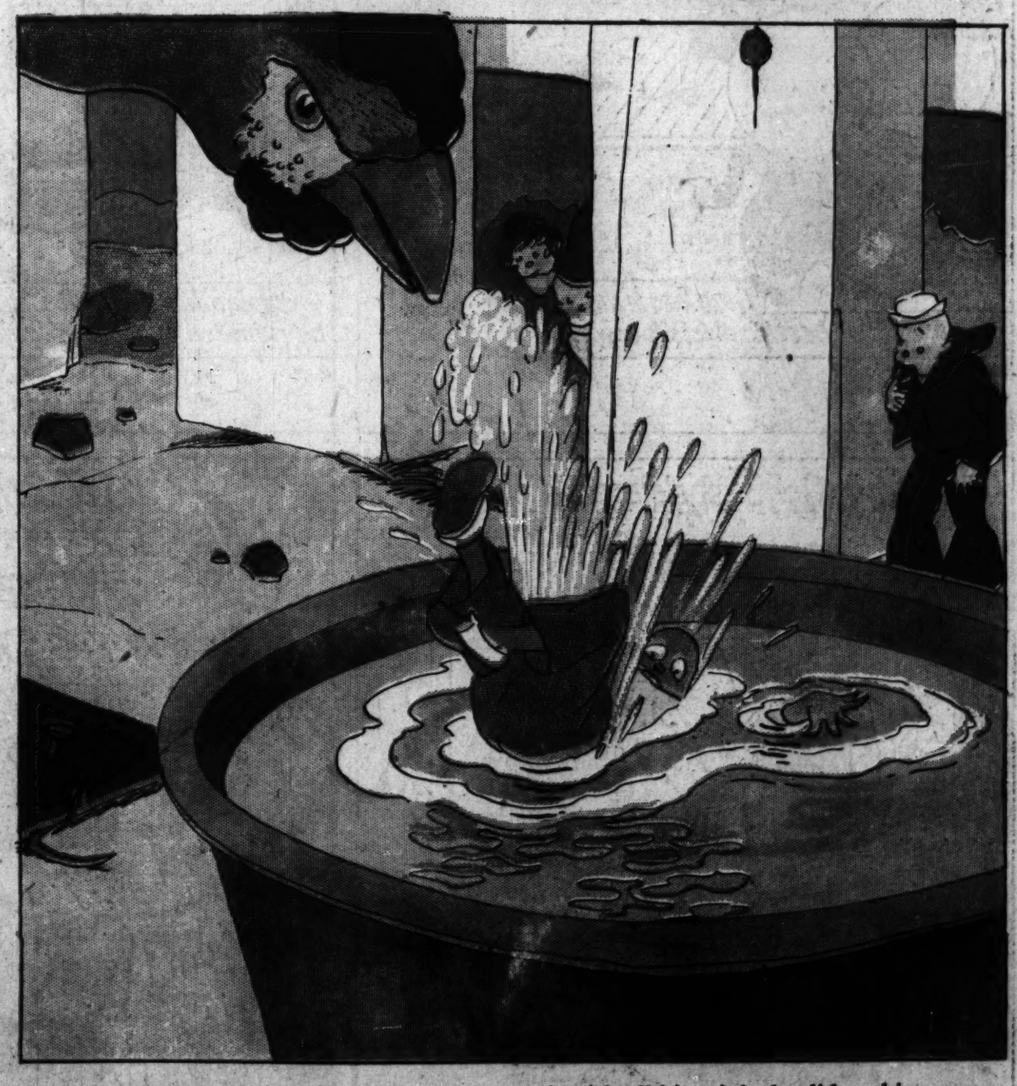
"For such a small person you talk mighty big," remarked the hen.

"Yas'm," answered Gogo glaring at the hen, "and if ah was as big as ah can talk an sure wouldn't waste mah time talkin', I'd be eatin' white meat of chicken."

"Now listen to me, you infinitesimal wart of ebony!" cried the hen, her eyes snapping. "You had better cool off or you will melt your collar button."

Gogo flew into a rage; he was so angry he could do nothing but jump up and down and mumble queer sounds.

"I think a little dip in cool water would sooth your anger," said the hen, and before the little chap realized what had happened the hen reached out her beak and caught Gogo by the collar of his sweater.



Although the little fellow kicked and struck with all his might he did nothing more than skin his tiny knuckles against the hen's strong beak.

Walking over to a pan of water near by, the hen dropped the kicking Teenie Weenie into it. "There!" she said, as Gogo floundered about in the cool water. "Maybe that will help you to cool off your sizzling temper," and turning about she walked away.

Gogo climbed onto the edge of the pan, where he sat shaking the water out of his ears. His anger had been somewhat cooled by the bath, but his deep contempt for chickens on the hoof was strong.

"Well," he muttered, as he watched the retreating hen, "a chicken is about de no accountess, good fo' nothingness thing they is, except when they's fried nice and brown in plenty of good, fresh buttah."
